INTRODUCTION.

BY

Rev. Canon CHR. WORDSWORTH, M.A., Sub-Dean of Salisbury Cathedral

AND

Master of St. Nicholas' Hospital, Salisbury.

In February, 1911, at the Mayor of Salisbury's banquet in the Council Chamber, Dr. John Wordsworth, the late Bishop of Salisbury, made a reference to Mr. Charles Haskins' book, then recently issued, upon The Salisbury Corporation Pictures and Plate. In his speech on that occasion he declared his opinion that the Author had "deserved well, not only of his readers, but of those personages who were represented" in the portraits which Mr. Haskins had described; for "he had made them living men, instead of mere ornaments, and had given very real pleasure to many who, like the speaker himself, were thoroughly interested in the history of their ancient City."

My Brother had previously written to Mr. Haskins (28th December, 1910) in very gratifying terms, as follows:—

"Your book of Corporation Pictures and Plate . . . . . . does our City great credit, and I thank you heartily for the labour and skill with which you have constructed this enduring monument of your civic life. I shall be glad to subscribe to the companion volume, The Ancient Trade Guilds of Salisbury.

"Wishing you every happiness in the new year, and in particular the happiness of seeing your new work as well finished as the earlier one,

"I am, sincerely yours,

John Sarum.

"To Charles Haskins, Esq."

It was the intention of the late Bishop of Salisbury, had his life here been prolonged, to contribute an introduction to the present work, and doubtless in that case he would have added to our knowledge from his stores of learning, while his insight into the practical relation between historical records and their bearing upon the social needs and problems of the present day, both in Salisbury itself, which he loved so well, and likewise in the wider field of humanity at large, would surely have contributed to our instruction.

Dr. Wordsworth's home was in Salisbury for six and twenty years, and I who have not as yet been a resident here for as many days, and have left my topographical books warehoused at Marlborough, am saved from aspiring to go beyond the role of what Juvenal might call "the giant's little brother." Nevertheless, I cannot resist the Author's kindly expressed desire that I should state, as I have done, the fact that my brother was interested in the present work, and that he intended to contribute to its introduction.

For my own part as a new comer I welcome such a volume as a worthy contribution to the knowledge of what I am proud to be privileged to call our local history, and I hail Mr. Haskins' new book as a pledge of the generosity of those who have the responsible custody of these valuable and interesting records, and as a proof of their readiness to bring the contents of such archives within reach of students and historians, as well as to lay them open to the intelligent reader here in Salisbury and in other places.

More than half-a-century ago Mr. James Waylen produced a History Military and Municipal of Marlborough, and followed it up with a similar book which grew out of a smaller work of his about Devizes. These books, however, have given us some extracts or some specimens only of surviving documents, and we have still, in the case of Marlborough, to wait for a complete or fairly representative edition of the Chamberlain's Book from the time of Queen Elizabeth. A transcript is in the hands of Mr. Ernest Milburn of that town.

In 1889 Mr. Frederick Hastings Goldney (then Mayor of Chippenham) edited, in a privately printed volume, the Records of Chippenham, relating to the borough from its incorporation, by Q.
Mary (1554) to its re-construction by Act of Parliament in the year first named.

A History of the Borough and Town of Calne and some of the Villages in its vicinity, by A. E. W. Marsh, with an introduction by the Rev. E. H. Goddard, came out in 1903. More recently, in 1908, for the adjoining county of Dorset (which is at present, as in an early period of our ecclesiastical history, included in the Diocese of Salisbury) the Reverend Charles H. Mayo, Canon non-residentiary of Sarum, and Mr. Arthur W. Gould, edited Municipal Records of the Borough of Dorchester, Dorset.

Wilton, Malmesbury, Bradford-on-Avon, and other places in the county of Wilts, besides those which I have previously named, have all had their own historians, some of them happily still spared to us. As regards Salisbury itself, the noble volume which Mr. Hatcher left to us nearly seventy years ago has been sufficient to teach us that the City of Salisbury had preserved her muniments in considerable numbers from the fourteenth century, and many other interesting documents have been generously given since his time. The Historical Manuscripts Commission added in 1901 some further particulars concerning certain of her civic treasures. The Records edited by Canon Rich Jones and Mr. Macray under the auspices of the Master of the Rolls gave us some knowledge of those documents which are in the custody of the Bishop, or of the Dean and Chapter, to which Benson and Hatcher and Sir Thomas Phillipps had already pointed the way. The publication of Monumenta Franciscana about 1858 gave us a glimpse of the first coming of the Greyfriars or Minorites to this place. It has been left to Mr. Haskins to lay open to us a later page in the history of the friars of their order (See pp. 89, 102, below.) The Sarum Processionale gives a further reference to them and to the Dominicans of Fisherton, a life-like portrait of one of whom (Brother John Sifrewaster) was reproduced for us in Mr. H. Littlehales' Old Service Books of the Church of England (Methuen, 1906 and 1910) from a miniature now in the British Museum, and forming part of a large Gospel Book which in its new and complete condition was given, circa 1405, to the Cathedral Church by John, Lord Lovel, one of our Benefactors.

Since the days of Dr. Drake and Rawlinson, and of Price and Dodsworth, of Britton, Benson and Hatcher, and even of Duke and Lisle Bowles, and of Jackson and Dayman, much water has flowed beneath the bridges of Fisherton and Harnham. Dr. Stubbs, with the two Maitlands, before and after him; Freeman and Froude, Green and Gardiner, Dixon and Gairdner, Lord Acton and Adolphus Ward, have given a new lease of life to historical study. Stanley, Jessopp and Benham, and our late Bishop, as well as the Bishop of Bristol, have shown how such studies—and even the dry bones of antiquity—may be made interesting at the present day. The Peacocks, Abbot Gasquet and Dr. Walter Frere for matters ecclesiastical; Mrs. Stopford Green, the Toulmin Smiths and Miss Margaret Bateson for town life and Gilds (or Guilds), have all contributed to our enlightenment. And coming nearer home, Miss M. E. Thompson and Miss Rotha Clay, Sir H. Talbot Baker, Mr. Nightingale and Mr. E. Kite, Mr. H. J. Swayne, and Dr.
C. R. and the late Mrs. Straton, and Messrs.
Harold Breakspear, E. E. Dorling and Clark
Maxwell, A. R. Malden and E. R. Nevill, Mr.
T. H. Baker, and more recently Mr. Haskins, besides others whom doubtless I could name if I had my books to refresh my memory, all show if Wessex (and Wiltshire in particular) is well equipped with workers in the field of research and local history.

A single instance occurs to me as sufficient to show what interesting particulars may be found in a book such as Mr. Haskins has prepared.

The building in which I have been writing this desultory introduction is situated on St.
John the Baptist's island in the Avon. In 1244
Bishop Robert Bingham built Harnham Bridge and this bridge-chapel, and directed that the Master of St. Nicholas' Hospital should have three chaplains under him and should reside with one of them, whose special duty it was to minister to the inmates. The office of the Master or Custos was to be "perpetual," and he was to have the appointment of the other chaplains and power to dismiss them. All four were to board together, but two of them were to have their beds in lodgings of their own on the bridge ("in ipsorum hospicio super pontem," St. Nicholas' Hospital Charters, ed. 1903, p. 26). The phrase ex opposito (id. p. 25) might conceivably mean that the two chaplains who slept out of the Hospital were to have beds in the St John's Chapel building, which is opposite St. Nicholas', but I incline to think that the Bishop intended that they should have beds over the way, where Mr. Tribbett and Mr. George now occupy cottages, on the western side of the bridge itself, opposite St. John's, and on the western part of the same island. The Royal Patent or "Perpetuity for the Maister, Chaplen, Brethren and Sisters of the hospitall of St. Nicholas" granted under the Great Seal in 1610, and ratifying in general terms the old Statutes of 1244 and 1478, reduced the number of chaplains to two, viz., the Master or "Custos," whose office is tenable for life, and one other chaplain, appointed from year to year and continued at the Master’s discretion (id. pp. 254—5).

We now learn from Mr. Haskins' book (pp. 99, 101, 111, below) that the procession of the Tailors' Gild, according to their 15th century ordinances, started from the Grey Friars on Midsummer Day (the Nativity of St. John the Baptist), or in the 16th century from the Tailors' Hall, and visited “Seynte Johnnys hows at Aylewater brigge” before they went to the Cathedral Church.*

I notice that of the five liturgical Gospels entered in Swayne’s Ledger (see p. 125, below) two, namely, the In principio from St. John i. and Recumbentibus from St. Mark xvi., are among the four select Gospels which are entered in the Salisbury Cathedral MS. Processionale (MS. 148) which I edited in my Salisbury Processions and Ceremonies in 1901. They belong respectively to the mass appointed for Ascension Day and the (third) mass for Christmas Day. In principio was also commonly said, according to Salisbury Use, by the celebrant in returning from the altar. These two select Gospels are common to the MS. procession book of 1445 and to the Tailors’ Ledger. These are preceded in the case of the procession book by (a) the Gospel of the Mass of the B. V. Mary, used, e.g., on the Annunciation and daily in the Chapel of the Virgin and in the “full service” in Advent; and (b) that for Epiphany (cf. p. 112 below).

The Ascension Day Gospel (St. Mark xvi. 15—18) was also appointed for the feast of SS. Cyriac and his companions on August 8th, which, when the Sunday letter was G, would fall on

* I have to thank Mr. J. J. Hammond for reminding me that “Haram” (or, as we now call it, “Harnham”) Bridge was known as “Aylyswade (‘Ayleswade,’ ‘Aleswade,’ or ‘Aileswade’) brigge” about 1392—1475. (See Tropenell Cartulary, ii., pp. 212, 214, 245—6.) Possibly the same or a similar name had been given to an older bridge, more directly in the line of Exeter Street, in earlier time, before Bishop Bingham’s bridge was built in 1244.
the Wednesday after Lammas Day, which was the feast of the Salisbury Merchants' Company, at least in the time of King James I. (p. 54).

The remaining three Gospels in Swayne's Ledger, viz., "Vidit Jesus publicanum" (St. Luke v. 27—33), "Discumbente Jesu" (St. Matt. ix. 10—14), and "Dixit Jesus discipulis suis et turbis Judaeorum, Amen, amen" (St. John vi. 53, 54) are those for votive masses for sinners, for penitents, and that of Requiem for the departed when this last was sung on a Saturday. Two of these might be used in the beginning (p. 65) and end of Lent, and the last would follow the dirge (p. 44) on the obits or "myndes" of brethren and benefactors (pp. 37 n, 101, 109—111).

Among the very numerous subjects in which the late Bishop of Salisbury took some interest one was the "sequence of liturgical colours" used at Salisbury. When the enquiry was begun some forty years ago some of us gave too ready credence to the rash and bold assertion that green was unknown to Sarum Use. Hatcher, Britton or Dodsworth, could probably have corrected us had they been alive, out of Treasurer T. Robertson's Cathedral Inventory of 1536, which was re-printed in Messrs. J. E. Nightingale and E. H. Goddard's Church Plate of Wilts (1891), p. 245. The "Jornall Book" of St. Edmund's parish in 1472 gives another instance (Churchwardens' Accounts, p. 3, cf. p. 374 id.) and now Mr. Haskins has brought within our reach the documents, on pp. 116,* 146, and 163 which give evidence of the use of green vestments (among others) found in this City about 1451 and 1548.

I am inclined to think that the word "blode" which occurs in the Tailors' inventory, printed on p. 116 (line 6), as re-read by Mr. T. H. Baker, see additional note on p. xxxv. below—("Item, a pair," i.e., a set or suit [of] "vestments of blode ground and gold birds, with a corporas")—may represent the mediæval Latin "blodii coloris," which C. Trice Martin, among other authorities, tells us, in his Record Interpreter, is equivalent to blue (or deep red).† I must leave it to philologists to determine whether or not blodius or blodeus can mean blood-colour (arterial or venal). Ducange, according to the note to Catholicon Anglicum (Camden Soc., N. Ser. 30), says it does:—"Blodeus, color sanguineus, a Saxonico blod, sanguis; intelligunt alii colorem cæruleum," and the text to the same authority (an English-Latin Dictionary of 1483) says "Blew (or Blowe) [i.e., Blue]; blodius." Per contra, the Latin-English Dictionary of 1440, known as "Promptorium Parvulorum" (E. E. Text Soc.), gives "Blew of colore: Blodius,-a,-um; bluetus, -a,-um," for which the old compiler Geoffrey, a Dominican anchorite of Lynn Blackfriars, Norfolk, cites as his authority the "Dictionarius," presumably that of Hugutio of Pisa, a jurist of

* See additional note p. xxxv.

† A certain blodium vestimentum occurs in the Durham Account Rolls of the Feretrar (or Shrine-keeper) of St. Cuthbert's Shrine, from 1397 to 1442, which Canon J. T. Fowler tells us was of a blue (indigo) colour, for which the word used in earlier days was indicus. Surtees Soc., vol. 103, Durham Rolls (iii.), pp. 896, 926.
Bologna, who was consecrated Bishop of Ferrara in 1190, seven or eight years before our Richard Poore became Dean at Old Sarum.

The same inventory (p. 116) contains the entry of a mass-book beginning (presumably on the second leaf, which was the usual method of description for the sake of distinctness) with the word "Suscepimus," as Mr. Baker re-reads it (See additional note p. xxxv.) The only suggestion that I can make is that the fraternity chaplain may possibly have had the "general" masses for the dead written for convenience at the beginning of his volume. For "suscepimus," the word cited, occurs (among other places, in the Sarum Missal) in the 4th of those "general" masses. See Burntisland edition, column 882*.

The page of Swayne's Ledger, of which Mr. Haskins gives a facsimile re-production at p. 118, is literally a page of history in itself. Mr. Haskins gives a note (see p. xxxvi.) correcting the reading of the MS. as it was first printed on p. 118, where the dedication of the Parish Church was doubtless, first described on the fair page, as that of Seynt Thomas ye Martir. Then in compliance with the proclamation of King Henry VIII., 16th November, 1538, which was obeyed in some places in 1539 and enforced more generally about 1542 and 1543, the name of St. Thomas of Canterbury was expunged, blotted out or erased from books, kalendars, and other writings. It was, I presume, subsequently, but still in Tudor times, that some parishioner, not content that his Parish Church should be without a Patron Saint, took his pen and inserted over the erasure, where "ye martir" had once stood, the word "apostele," and I should not be surprised if it were the case that some of his poorer neighbours went round from door to door "a-thomasing" on the 5th day before Christmas. But my books have already arrived and are unpacked. I am my own librarian, and I owe it to the volumes to find shelf-room for all of them before I open any more of them. And, as the prince among librarians, Henry Bradshaw, used to say, "the librarian who reads is lost."

CHR. WORDSWORTH.
THE series of articles upon the Guilds and Companies of Salisbury, which appeared in the Salisbury and Winchester Journal during the years 1907—08—09, was the result of an endeavour to collate the decreasing number of records of these ancient organisations still left in the City. The interest shown in the articles, which form the basis of the present book, and a generally expressed wish that they should be published in a more permanent form, encouraged me to extend my researches, with the result that a number of books, charters and other MSS. originally belonging to the local Guilds and Companies were placed at my disposal, both by residents in Salisbury and elsewhere. Several of these documents have since been presented to the City. This kindness enabled me to add a considerable amount of information, illustrating the influence exerted by Guild and Company upon the economic and corporate life of the City, which may be of value to the student of the history of Salisbury.

In the introductory chapter, upon the origin and development of English Guilds, I have quoted somewhat freely from well-known authorities for the purpose of giving a limited survey of the history of English Guilds in general in such a form as to afford the reader an outline of the development of Guilds and their influence on the social and organic growth of the nation.

There are also included extracts from the Corporation Ledgers and other sources which do not directly refer to Guild or Company, but these mute witnesses of the past throw some light on the history of Salisbury and on the customs and habits of the inhabitants, which may assist us in arriving at a better understanding of the inner life of the City and the rules and regulations under which it was governed.

I am under a deep obligation to Mr. T. H. Baker, the Hon. Curator of the Salisbury Corporation Muniments, for his help in translating, deciphering and copying the records of the Corporation and those of the Tailors' Guild, and for information respecting many of the Salisbury Inns, included in the Brewers' Guild. My sincere thanks are given to Canon Wordsworth for his introductory notes and for the friendly criticism to which the proofs were subjected by him; but several of them were already printed off before I had an opportunity of sending them to him; also to Mr. A. R. Malden, Dr. Bourne, Dr. H. P. Blackmore, Mr. E. Doran Webb, Rev. E. R. Nevill, Mr. A. J. Lowe, and Mr. J. J. Hammond for valuable advice and assistance received upon many occasions since the commencement of the work.

I am much indebted to Mr. Ed. John Targett, Mr. Arthur Whitehead and Mr. J. L. Lovibond for permission to extract information from books, deeds and other MSS. in their possession. My acknowledgments are due to the Mayor and Corporation, the Hon. Director of the Salisbury Museum, Mr. Ed. John Targett, and Mr. E. Doran Webb, as custodians and owners of valuable MSS. and other objects of interest connected with the Guilds and Companies, for their permission to photograph and reproduce them in this volume; and also to Mr. A. E. Butcher for preparing the index.

THE ANCIENT TRADE GUILDS
AND

ORIGIN AND DEVELOPMENT OF ENGLISH GUILDS.

The origin of English Guilds dates back to early Saxon times. They were confraternities united for the discharge of common or mutual good offices, and supported by contributions of money from each member, and may be considered as the precursors of, or the foundation upon which, much of our modern system of local government was built. They existed before the charters and the civic ordinances; in fact, they are said to have been instrumental in procuring the grant of the charters and ordinances, and supplied the social force that made them effective. They were one of the chief instruments in the promotion of social progress; by their aid the people gained experience in self-government, and built up the social structure which in time superseded the Guild. The following extracts from three well-known authorities will probably assist the reader in forming an idea of the State and the social conditions existent during the period when the great development of the English Guild took place. Unwin, in his Gilds and Companies of London, referring to the early stages in the growth of towns, says:—

"The State, the Municipality, and the individual as we know them, did not exist in mediæval times. They were each in a condition of becoming. They were helping each other to grow into their present definite shapes by constant interaction on each other. . . . This process of interaction can nowhere be studied to better advantage than in the birth, life and development of the Gild, and of those kindred organizations which have succeeded to its functions. We can there watch in all its successive phases that transformation of social forces into political forces which is the very essence of what we call progress. We see class after class constituting itself a social force by the act of self-organization. Then as the new social force gains political recognition, the voluntary association passes wholly or partly into an organ of public administration."

Dr. Stubbs, in his Constitutional History of England, says:—

"London appears to have been a collection of small communities, Manors, parishes, Churchsokens and Guilds, held and governed in the usual way; the Manors descending by inheritance, the Church jurisdiction exercised under the Bishop, the Chapter and the Monasteries; the Guilds administered by their own officers and administering their own property; as holding in chief of the King. The lords of the franchises, the prelates of the Church, and even the aldermen of the Guild, where the Guild possessed estates, might bear the title of barons, it was for the most part an aristocratic constitution, and had its unity, not in the Municipal principle, but in the system of the shire."

The Rev. P. H. Ditchfield, in The City Companies of London, gives the following description of the distinctive features of Guilds in the Middle Ages, and of the aims and objects of these fraternities or voluntary associations:—

"The name Guild is derived from the Anglo-Saxon word Geldan or Gildan, which means to pay, and signifies that the members were required to contribute something towards the support of the brotherhood to which they belonged. These early English Guilds were instituted to provide mutual help, enjoyment and encouragement in good endeavour. The social life of the people centred round the Guilds, which before poor laws were invented took the place of the modern friendly societies, but with a higher aim; while it joined all classes together in care for the needy, and for objects of common welfare. It did not neglect the form and practice of religion, justice and morality; each member was a brother or a sister, and was treated as one of a large family. If he became ill, or poor, or infirm, he was supported by the Guild. If his cattle were stolen or his house blown down, or in case of any loss by fire, flood, shipwreck, or violence, his brethren of the Guild would come to the rescue and supply his needs, and repair the loss; and when any brother or sister died the Guild paid the funeral expenses. If any member wishing to go on a pilgrimage to the shrine of St. Joseph at Glastonbury, or St. Thomas-a-Becket at Canterbury, or to Rome itself, his brethren helped him on his way.”

Some Guilds provided lodgings for pilgrims who passed through the town in which they were founded, and every fraternity that could afford it maintained their own priest to exercise the duties of his calling, which included praying for the good state (or as we should now say the welfare) of the members, and for the souls of the dead who had been members of the Guild. Ditchfield further explains that—

“The Parish Church was the natural centre round which gathered the temporal as well as the spiritual concerns of the parish. Consequently we find the parish fraternity, generally dedicated to the patron saint of the parish, and undertaking the repair of the fabric and the expenses of public worship in their Parish Church. The repair of bridges and roads, of walls and city gates, the protection of the fortifications and defences, as well as acts of benevolence, feeding the poor, providing lodgings for strangers, and alms-houses for poor townsfolk were some of the varied benefits which the ancient Guilds bestowed upon their age and generation.”
Mediaeval Guilds may be divided into several classes, viz., Guilds exclusively religious, which are said to date from early Saxon times; the old Saxon "Frith Gild," for the promotion of peace and the establishment of law and order; the ancient "Gilda Mercatoria" that came into existence in England soon after the Norman Conquest, and which controlled and monopolized the whole trade of a town; Social Guilds, founded for the purpose of promoting good fellowship, benevolence and thrift; and Trade Guilds, both sections of which, the Merchants and the craft organizations, in time superseded the ancient "Gild Merchant." The annual feast of each Guild was held on the day of their patron saint, when the members attended Church, performed a miracle play, and dined together. As examples of the exclusively religious guilds may be mentioned "Corpus Christi of York," whose purpose was the conduct of a great and solemn procession to celebrate one of the most important of Church doctrines; and the guilds of priests, especially the wide-spread "Guild of Kalenders," so called because the members met on the Kalend or first of every month. This Guild in some places, as at Bristol, maintained a school. Sir Walter Besant informs us in his Mediaeval London that—

"The oldest Guild-Statutes extant in this country are the laws of three Guilds, those of Exeter, Abbotsbury and Cambridge. The general principles of the three are thus summed up by Brentano:—'The drawing up of these statutes took place in the beginning of the XI. century. . . . The Guild's object, according to the statutes of the Exeter Guild, appears to have been the support and nursing of infirm Guild-brothers, the burial of the dead, the performance of religious services, and the saying of prayers for their souls. The association met every year on the feast of St. Peter for united worship in honour of their patron saint. Besides this there was a common meal; and in order that the poor might also have their share in the joys of the festival, they received alms on the day of the feast; for which purpose the Guild-brothers were obliged to furnish, on the eve of the day, contributions of bread.'"

The essence of the manifold regulations of these Guilds appears to be the brotherly banding together into close unions of man and man, sometimes established on and fortified by oath, for the purpose of mutual help and support. "The regulations of these Guilds resembled each other. Each Guild provided for its own masses and Church services, and for the burial of its members, bringing the body to be buried, and providing wax lights, alms and masses." Another example of the religious Guild is the Fraternity of St. James, Garlickhithe, which was governed by rules, preserved by Stow, in the following quaint language:—

"In the worship of God Almighty our creator, and his Moder Saint Marie, and Allhallows, and Saint James Apostle; a Fraternite is begon of Gode-Men in the Churche of Saint-James, the Yer of our Lord 1375, for Amendment of her lyves, and of her Brethren and Sustrein of the Brederhede. And ech of theym had sworn vpon the Booke to performe the pointes vndernethe at her power. Fyrst—All who wisicheth other schul be in the same Brederhede, they schul nothing of goodloos conditions and bering; and that he love God and holy Chirche and his neybour as holy Chyrche maketh mencion. Who that entreth in the same Fraternite, he shal geve at the entrie to the comon box vii. viii. The forseid Brethrehede will that there be wardeyns therof, which wardeyns shal gather the Quartridge of the Brethren and Sustren, and trewelick yield her account therof everty Yer once to the wardeyns that have been to fore hem of the Bretherhede, with other wysest of the Bretherhede."

The old Saxon Frith Gild was an attempt on the part of the people to supplement the defective execution of the law by measures for mutual defence. In addition to the ordinary rules of the Religious Guild, the Frith Guild had orders and regulations connected with the special object of the Society, viz., putting down theft. Dr. Stubbs says "Each member pays fourpence for common purposes towards a sort of insurance fund from which the Guild makes good the losses of members; and a contribution of one shilling towards the pursuit of the thief. The members are arranged in bodies of ten, one of whom is the head man; these, again, are classed in tens under a common leader, who with the other head men acts as treasurer and adviser of the hundred members. The special objects, for which minute directions are given, are the pursuit and conviction of thieves and the exacting of compensation." Unwin, writing of the same Guild, says:—"Those who had horses were to follow the track over the border for one riding, and those who had no horses were to work for the absent till their return. Members who had lost property and could show that it had been stolen, might claim compensation at a fixed rate (called the ceapgild) from the common fund. If a thief was caught and hanged his goods were confiscated, and after the ceapgild had been deducted, half the surplus was given to his wife, and the other half was divided between the King and the fellowship." It is not without interest to observe that the ancient Frith Guild appears to have first conceived the principle upon which present-day prosecution of felons societies are founded.
The Merchant Guild "Ceapmanne Gilde," or Hansa, is supposed to have originated at least as long ago as the Conquest. During the XII. century the "Hansa" or Gild began to appear in every town of any importance. These Guilds were unions of the merchants for their own protection and the regulation of trade. They contained all the wealthier traders of a town, whether they possessed an estate of land or not, as Chaucer sets out in the Prologue to his Canterbury Tales:—

"A Marchant was ther with a forked berd,
In mottelee, and highe on hors he sat,
And on his hed a Flaundrish bever hat,
An Haberdasher and a Carpenter
A Webbe, a Deyer, and a Tapiser,
Were alle yclothed in a liverie
Of a solempe and grete fraternite;
Ful freshe and newe her gere 1ypiked was,
Hir knives were yclaped not with bras,
But all with silver wrought ful clene and wel,
Hir girdeles and hir pouches every 2del
Wel semed eche of hem a fayre burgeys,3
To sitten in a Yeldhall, on a deys4
Everich for the wisdom that he can
Was shaply for to ben an Alderman."

The merchants of London obtained a licence for their Guild during the reign of Henry I., and a few years later in the same reign (1130) we find the merchants of Lincoln making a payment of two hundred marks of silver and four marks of gold that they might hold their city of the King in chief. A charter would probably be the result of this payment, or, at all events, the bestowal of privileges enumerated in the later charter of Henry II. Henry specifies, as one of the then existing rights of the burghers of Lincoln, that they had a Merchant Guild composed of the merchants of the city and the merchants of the county. Dr. Stubbs mentions the curious payment of "Thomas of York, the son of Ulviet, who gives the King a coursing dog that he may be an alderman of the Merchant Guild of York; the value of a coursing dog was twenty shillings, so that either the position was an unimportant one or Thomas' hold upon it so strong as to make the King's consent a matter of small value. It was no part of the Royal policy of Henry II. to encourage Municipal independence where it could not be made directly serviceable to the humiliation of the nobles." The Merchant Guild of Lincoln or of York was recognised, but the Commune of London was discouraged, and it was not until 1191 that the London Commune obtained legal recognition. But during this reign the possession of a Merchant Guild became the sign and token of partial Municipal independence. It was, in fact, if not in theory, the governing body of the town. Yet the Merchant Guild and the governing body of the town were not really identical; the business of the Guild was the regulation of trade; the business of the Commune was the administration of justice; the chief of the Guild was the Alderman; the chief of the Magistracy was the Reeve. Without a Royal Charter these Guilds were "Adulterine," and liable to be broken up. In the XXVI. year of Henry II. no less than eighteen Adulterine Guilds were fined various sums of money, because they had not purchased the right of association.

But with a charter the Guild could impose their bye-laws on the whole borough, and as Dr. Stubbs says:

"When the Merchant Guild had acquired jurisdiction, or merged its existence in the Corporation, that is, the Commune or governing body; the Guild-hall became the common hall of the city, and the 'Port-Mote' (for that seems to be the proper name for the court of the Guild), became the judicial assembly of the freemen; the title of alderman which had once belonged to the heads of the Guild was transferred to the heads of the several wards into which the town was divided. . . . When the Merchant Guild had become identified with the Commune or Corporation its power of regulation of trade passed, together with its other functions and properties, into the same hands, and the property held by the Merchant Guild became town property and was secured by successive Royal Charters."

The history of the "Gilda Mercatoria," in its relation to the Municipal government on the one hand and to the Craft Guild on the other is very complex, but each organization, the "Gild Merchant" in the earliest period and the Craft Guild at a later date, played an important part in the making of England. Both were formed for the purpose of promoting the interests of trade and the regulation of industry. We have seen that the "Gilda Mercatoria" was simply the whole of the merchants of a town organized for the protection of their interests and for the exclusion of rivals; but among those who were regarded as merchants, and were admitted to membership, were the artisans who bought their own raw material and sold the produce of their labour as a manufactured article. Very strict were the laws which the Gild enforced, and merciless the restrictions which they placed on all strangers who attempted to sell goods in the city.
In the XIV. century the trade of England continued to expand, and there was a great increase in the number of the skilled craftsmen who were traders, but composed of the less important masters of a craft, below the higher body of the Gild, and somewhat in rivalry with it. The oppression which this class was liable to, the natural division of labour, and the tendency of the age for men of the same occupation to band themselves together, caused these craftsmen to combine for their own protection, and so the Craft Guilds were brought into existence. The ancient "Gild Merchant" was gradually displaced by the craft fraternities, which succeeded in slowly breaking down the trade monopoly of the older organization, and by the end of the XIV. or the beginning of the XV. centuries the Craft Guilds were fully developed and in a flourishing condition. From this time the "Gild Merchant," with its monopoly of trade, was by a gradual process replaced by a number of separate Guilds representing the various trades and handicrafts.

In some towns there appears to have been considerable friction between these rival organizations during the process of displacement, but as far as can be ascertained, this was not the case in Salisbury, where the manufacturing merchant, by association with the more humble craftsmen of his trade, appears to have acquired a considerable influence in the control of the Craft Guild, generally becoming Master of the Guild.

The Salisbury Corporation Ledgers show that after 1420 there were 19 separate Craft Guilds in the city, which embraced 36 distinct trades.
From this time there arose a new kind of Guild, viz., "The Merchants," which included those traders who sold wares produced by others, not only the shopkeeper who dealt in one or more kinds of goods, but also the import and export merchant, the vintner, the woolmonger, the grocer, the mercer, &c.

Two of the Salisbury Craft Guilds secured independent jurisdiction for themselves, viz., the Tailors, who received the Royal grant of a charter in 1447, and the Weavers, who were incorporated at a later date. Ditchfield says:—

"A typical Craft Guild of the late XIVth century contained three classes of artisans, viz., Masters, journeymen and apprentices; and in spite of certain inequalities, the interests of all three classes were identical. A craftsman before he became a freeman had to serve an apprenticeship for seven years, during which time he was the servant and in some cases the adopted son of the man to whom he was bound, he had to obey the laws of the Guild; these laws made a man work during stated hours and no longer, they regulated the price of his work; they would not allow him to work on Church festivals; they would not let him go to law with another of the same Guild; they sent him to Church regularly; if he disgraced his moral character in any way, they turned him out of his trade, and sent him out of the city, in other words, he could not exercise his freedom in living idly or mischievously. . . . The object of the Crafts Guilds in time became of equal benefit to the Master, the workman and the consumer, their object was to secure to the Master honest, skilful and efficient work and service; and to the workman freedom from undue competition in his industry and fair wages, together with a provision for his relief in sickness and old age, and to the consumer a guarantee against bad materials, defective workmanship and excessive prices."

The great industrial revolution of the XVIII. century made it impossible, in many of the larger industries, to reconcile the interests of the masters and the journeymen within the Guild organization; and as the revolution advanced, the power of the companies to superintend and regulate trade became obsolete. Consequently there was an entire breakdown of the Guild system. Until the middle of the XVIII. century England may be said to have been, in a very real sense a community in which class was not sharply divided from class, but this state of things was entirely altered by the increasing trade and the changed condition of the industries of the country. The problem of production was solved, but the problem of the distribution of wealth was accentuated, and the accentuation of the problem of distribution led to the widening in the gulf between class and class. From this time onwards Guild and Company "abandoned the attempt to regulate an expanding industry on Guild principles, and by the end of the century the interests of the manual workers had passed, with a few exceptions, from the hands of the Guild to that of the Trade Union."
CHAPTER II.

THE MERCHANT GUILD OF OLD SARUM.

The inhabitants of the ancient city of "Saresberie" and its suburbs under Henry II. (1154—89) are described in Hatcher's History of Salisbury as consisting of two classes of men, distinguished if not by different privileges, at least by privileges emanating from a different source. "One of these was formed by the tenants and dependents of the Bishop and members of the Church establishment, who had obtained from this King a confirmation of all the privileges and possessions granted by his grandfather, and various acquisitions which they had since made. The other class was composed of the tenants and dependents of the Crown, who dwelt within the fortress and its precincts." We have seen how essential it was in ancient towns that some recognised authority should be in existence to control and regulate the trade of the town; and since trade was the raison d'être of the towns, the chief traders began naturally to frame commercial regulations and to form themselves into a voluntary association (an unlicenced Guild). Such a Guild would furnish the great majority of the members of the Court-leet. They would be the electors, and at a later date the recipients of the charters. Dr. Stubbs gives a very clear definition of members of a township or Hundred Court of a town in mediæval times. He says:— "These were the owners of land, the owners of houses, shops or gardens; the burgage-tenants, from whose burgages the rent was originally due, and from which it must, if raised legally, be paid; these men met together in their 'husting' or place for deliberation, as the men of the township; in a trading town they would be members of the Guild; and in the judicial work of the town they were the class who furnished the judices and juratores, the leet-jury in fact.'" Under the Reeve there was already a "Communitas Civitatis," although of a very primitive form. The same author, referring to the Port-Reeve, says:—"It may be inferred that he was a Royal officer, who stood to the merchant of the city in the relation in which the Bishop stood to the clergy; and if he were the head (alderman) of the Guild, his office illustrates very well the combination of voluntary organisation with administrative machinery which marks the English Municipal system from its earliest days."

The men of Old Sarum received their charter from Henry II. in 1176. This charter, which gave them licence to found a Guild of Merchants, was a confirmation of unchartered privileges which the traders of the place had enjoyed from much earlier times. A charter did not originate a Guild any more than a charter of incorporation granted in the present day would bring into existence a town. Both may be said to stereotype existing facts rather than create a state of things that did not previously exist.

It is interesting to notice that about this time, 1175 to 1185 a number of "Adulterine" or unlicenced Guilds were fined by the King's orders for having been formed without Royal licence, and the Pipe-Roll for 1179—80 records fines inflicted upon no less than eighteen such Guilds in London alone.

The charter of 1176 gave to the citizens, that is to the burghers, who would have been members of the Guild of Old Sarum, the same acquaintance and liberties as were enjoyed by the merchants of Winchester and Wilton under the charters that had been granted to those places in the reign of Henry I. Later in the reign of Henry II. "the men of Andover render an account of ten marks for having the same liberty as the men of Wilton and Sarum have in their Guilds." This was followed in the 6th year of King John (1200) by that monarch granting a charter to Andover, which says:—"Know ye we have granted to the men of Andover that they may have a Gild of Merchants."

The grant of a charter gave to the traders of Old Sarum "a soke" or a collective lordship over the whole trade of the city, and what had previously been only a Voluntary Association of the traders became the "Gilda Mercatoria," an exclusive body, to which trade was restricted, and with powers and privileges enabling them to rule and regulate the trade of their city.

The Pipe-Rolls in the British Museum show that the city of Old Sarum with its suburbs was divided into Aldermanries.

The Aldermen were, in the first place, landholders, the Knights of former days, and as Unwin says:—"By the end of the XII. century they had become a class of Royal officials . . . and this official position was the source, or at any rate, the essential condition of their mercantile success." As aldermen this ruling class assessed the King's taxes, and when Mayors were first appointed they were chosen from this class. Readers of the History of Salisbury will remember that the foundations of the Cathedral were laid in 1220. Six years later to encourage those who might be disposed to transfer their residence from Old Sarum, the Bishop, as lord of the soil of the new city, issued a deed granting and confirming to the citizens of his city of "New Saresberie" certain privileges, and security in connection with tenements which they might build. In the ensuing year the Bishop obtained the Royal sanction to this deed, viz., the charter of Henry III., which granted to the city called "New Saresbury" that it should be a free city for ever, and that the citizens should be quit throughout his dominions of tolls, &c., and in every respect should enjoy the same liberties and immunities as "our citizens of Winchester have."

We have it upon the authority of Dr. Stubbs that a Merchant Guild was one of the privileges of all free cities; and Dean Kitchen, in his book Winchester, tells us that the charter granted to that city by King Henry II. says:—"The citizens in their merchant guild shall enjoy all such liberties as they had in the days of Henry I. We may therefore assume that a merchant-guild was founded in New Sarum in 1227, and that the city which arose under the fostering care and protection of the bishops rapidly increased both in size and in prosperity."
CHAPTER III.

THE MERCHANT GUILD OF NEW SARUM.

With the advent of a charter the Merchant Guild would assume the character of an official organization, and probably became at once the Commune or the governing body of the new city under their overlord, the Bishop, and his officers. The growth of New Sarum, caused partly by the influx of strangers, but principally by the migration of people from the old city, continued, more especially after Bishop Bingham had built the bridge over the river Avon at Harnham. The opening of this bridge changed the great western road which ran from Old Sarum through Bemerton and Wilton to the detriment of Wilton, but to the advantage of the new city and its trade. Although a considerable number of the inhabitants left the old city and settled in New Sarum, it was very many years before Old Sarum became really deserted. We find that two Chaplains were appointed there to the King's Chapel in 1243, one Chaplain to the Chapel of St. Mary Magdalene in the tower of the Castle in 1246; and later Ralph Bulle was appointed to the Free Chapel of the Holy Cross at Old Sarum. There is also evidence that the number of traders, members of the old Merchant Guild, who continued to live at Old Sarum in 1255 and in 1275, was sufficiently large and strong enough to maintain their chartered rights. At an inquest held by the Judges in Eyre at Wilton, in the 29th year of Henry III. (1255), the jurors of Old Sarum stated that the Ville of Sarum, with the mill and appurtenances, was worth ten marks per annum, for which the Sheriff answered to the Exchequer. They said that nothing belonged to the Castle beyond the gates, either in rents, wards, or assizes. They added, the men of Old Sarum had the return of the King's writs, and that they enjoyed this privilege by the grant of their Lord the King and his predecessors; and that John of Sturminster, Chaplain, held the Church of St. Peter by the gift of the King, &c.

At another inquiry instituted by the Judges in Eyre at New Sarum in the third year of Edward I. (1275), the citizens (merchants) of New Sarum lodged a complaint that the bailiffs of Wilton obstructed merchants carrying their merchandize on the King's highway to New Sarum.

The Jurats of Old Sarum complained at the same inquiry that the Bishop of Sarum, who had the privilege under the charter of Henry III. of a free market on Tuesdays weekly, allowed several markets to be held in New Sarum during the seven days, instead of one, to the prejudice of the merchants of Old Sarum.

Another grievance was that, although the King's predecessors had, by charter, exempted the burgesses (merchants) of Old Sarum from tolls and customs as freely as the citizens of Winchester, yet the Bishop of Winchester and his bailiffs infringed these liberties, "as well at the fair of St. Giles', as elsewhere contrary to justice, and to the will of the King."
Little is heard of the Old Sarum merchant after this date. The ancient city gradually became deserted and fell into ruins, only the Castle, which was held by a small garrison, and the houses within the Castle were kept in repair. In 1331, when Robert Wyvil was Bishop, the King (Edward III.) granted to him and the Dean and Chapter all the stone of the walls of the Norman Cathedral, and the houses of the Bishop and Canons in the old city, for the building of the tower of the new Cathedral and of the Close wall.

As before stated, New Sarum was made a free city in 1227, and as a consequence had its Merchant Guild. The process by which the Guild gained its Municipal position is rather obscure, but it appears that the Guild Merchant could now frame regulations which it would be extremely difficult for any trader to disregard. The retail trade within the City was restricted to their own members individually, and the wholesale trade coming to the town was reserved to the Guild collectively. Members of the Merchant Guild alone might sell within the City, and traders coming from without might sell only to the Merchant Guild. Thus, as all townsmen of any importance at this time were traders, and, therefore, members of the Merchant Guild, the town and its government, and the trade and its government, became so fused, that in reading the old documents of an ancient city you find in early days you cannot say to which they belong—Guild or town. Thus the Guildhall was at first the meeting place of the civic fathers. In the 14th and 15th centuries the Guildhall and the Townhall became synonymous. The ideas of the Guild members and townsmen were, perhaps, kept apart, but in practice the two bodies were identical, and, as years went by, the Guild seems to have become the Commune, and in most of the old English cities and in the Royal burghs of Scotland, the Merchant Guild became the governing body of the town, and the Guildhall became the Townhall. In the 16th century the Townhall began to draw away from the Guild, and finally takes its place as the home of civic government. It must be quite understood that membership of the Guild conferred equally the freedom of the City and the legal status of a burgess.

With a charter the Guild Merchant could receive and enfranchise serfs, as well as impose their Guild-laws on the whole city. The Guild would include all traders of importance, and also those who held office or land, but the lower class of townsmen, until admitted into the Guild, was on a level with the rustici or villein. The nativus who could obtain admission into the Guild and was unclaimed by his lord for a year and a day became a freeman; his membership of the Guild gave him that status which otherwise the law refused to landless men.

_Wiltshire Notes and Queries_, 1902, contains the following interesting extract from an Assize Roll of 33 Henry III., which is illustrative of the civic history of Salisbury and the Merchant Guild, and is interesting as showing one of the ways in which a nief (nativus) or villein born on the soil could gain his freedom:—

"John de Grimstede claims Robert of Alwardbury as his nief and fugitive who fled from his land after the last return of King John from Ireland to England. And he produces many of his kindred, both on the father's and the mother's side, who acknowledge themselves John's villeins. Robert does not deny his parentage, but says that continuously for 10 years past he has been dwelling in the City of Sarum in lot and in scot, and in the Merchant Gild as free burgess. Such is the custom and freedom of the said City that if anyone shall be for one year and a day without any claim made on him, and in the Gild of Merchants as burgess, he shall remain free for ever, without anyone being able to claim him as nief, of this he puts himself upon the Country. The Jury say that he had remained a year and a day before John de Grimstede put in his claim. (The plea was allowed; Robert went free, and John de Grimstede was amerced)."

When Municipal rights were granted, the "porte-reeve" was replaced by the "Mayor," whose appearance is always the sign of the establishment of the Commune. This grant of corporate power under a Mayor, which marked the victory of the Communal principle, and which displaced the complicated system of the Guild and franchise, appears to have taken place in New Sarum about the middle of the XIII. century. The Ledgers of the Corporation do not go back beyond the reign of Richard II. (1398), but Hatcher gives a list of the names of the Mayors of New Sarum from the year 1261. This list, which he compiled from MSS in the Corporation Muniment Room and from other sources, informs us that Reginald de Wych was Mayor in 1261, and also that the name is mentioned in the test to the deed of the foundation of the College de Valle. The next five names on the list, viz., Richard de Aune, William Aubyn, Gilbert Chynne, Hamo de Liswys and John le Escut, are taken from the Pleas of the Crown, 1268 to 1298.

These are followed by the names of six other Mayors, including Richard de Ludgarshall, who was appointed in 1302, and to whom reference will be made in connection with the next change in the Merchant Guild. From the list of names it appears that there were only twelve persons who served in the office of Mayor between the years 1261 and 1302, but in these early days there was not an annual appointment to the Mayoralty. Usually the person chosen held the position several years in succession; i.e., the first Mayor of London was Henry Fitz Ailwyn, draper (that is a merchant manufacturer of woollen cloth, and not as now a dealer in that and other articles). Henry Fitz Ailwyn was appointed Mayor of London in 1189, and he continued to hold the office until his death in 1213.

The importance of the growing Municipal life was demonstrated in 1264 when Simon de Montfort, one of the first to recognise the growing importance of the trading middle classes, issued writs in the King's name summoning to Parliament, in addition to the classes hitherto represented, two burgesses from each of the cities and boroughs in England. New Sarum now had the privilege of election which was vested in the Mayor and the Aldermen.

In the year 1296 the King sent writs to the citizens and "gode men" of twenty-three towns and cities, of which New Sarum was one, requiring them to select four of the most efficient citizens to attend the Parliament at Bury, in order to fix on a new town for the "Staple" to the profit of the King and of the merchants of the Kingdom.

Again, in 1300 it is recorded "That before Elyas Russell, Mayor; John le Blunt, Galfrid de Norton, William de Bettonia, William de Leyr, Richard de Glocester, Walter de Finchinfeud and the rest of the Aldermen, there were convened six of the best and "moste discrete" of each of the wards, to choose citizens to be present at the Parliament of their lord the King."

The power and influence now placed in the hands of the Corporation, combined with the growing prosperity of the merchants of the new City, appears to have resulted in an exaggeration of civic independence. The Mayor and the Aldermen rebelled against the just rights of the Bishop under which they had thriven, with the result that the Municipal Constitution, the Merchant Guild, and all the privileges which the citizens had enjoyed under the Bishop since 1227 were thrown away, and their charters and the Corporate Seal were surrendered.

Readers of Hatcher's history will remember that the Charter of Henry III., which granted to the citizens of Salisbury "all the liberties and immunities, throughout our realm, which our citizens of Winchester enjoy," also gave to the Bishop, as overlord, the power to take tallage of the citizens, "when we or our heirs tallage our domains." The Bishop, although he had paid tallage to the King, did not impose a tallage upon the citizens until the year 1302, when the merchants, forgetting in their prosperity how much they were indebted to their overlord, refused to pay him tallage. The Mayor, Richard of Ludgershall, and a party of citizens, appealed to the King, and without the consent of the Corporation they, on April 6th, 1302, obtained permission to renounce the privileges which they had been granted under the above Charter, upon condition that they were exempted from the claims of their Bishop. The folly of their choice was soon evident. Deprived of their advantages and immunities, the trade of the City declined, and accordingly, in 1306, the more considerate portion of the community submitted to the Bishop. The King, at the solicitation of the prelate, restored the privileges which they had renounced, but the citizens had to pay a fine to the King of 200 marks for the renewal of their liberties. An agreement was arranged for the maintenance of concord and confidence in the future. The agreement provided that the citizens should be duly subject to their lord the Bishop. They were permitted to choose their Mayor, but he was to be sworn before the bailiff and steward of the Bishop. The common seal was to be kept under three keys, one of which was to be held by the Bishop. The last article, which is important in connection with this Guild, provided that only those who previous to the conclusion of the agreement had submitted to the Bishop, who promised to obey his ordinances, and whose names were entered on the schedule attached to the agreement, were to be included in the Guild of Merchants. Afterwards we find a regulation that no one should participate in this privilege unless he was admitted a member of the Merchant Guild by the Bishop or by the Mayor. The fees arising from such admissions were to be divided into four parts, two of which were to be assigned to the Bishop, a third in equal portions to the Mayor and bailiffs, and a fourth to the Corporation. Those citizens who, having renounced their privileges and still declined to return to the Bishop’s protection, were not only... not entitled to become members of the Merchant Guild, but were also debarred from all public business, from all contracts and bargains, and from all public offices, including membership of the Corporation. In the concluding clause the citizens made themselves liable to be fined one hundred pounds whenever any Mayor or Council in the future should be guilty of a breach of the agreement. There were 217 persons who became parties to this agreement. The list is preserved in the Municipal records, under four wards:—New Street Ward, Market Ward, St. Martin’s Ward and Meadow Ward, and amongst the signatories are tuckers, parchment-makers, goldsmiths, fishermen, linendrapers, hatters, &c. From this time the Corporation consisted of two classes, the twenty-four (aldermen) and the forty-eight (assistants).

Hatcher, referring to this agreement, says:—“According to the terms of this agreement with the Bishop, the Mayor and Corporation were united in a Guild, or religious confraternity, dedicated to St. George . . . a Guildhall, for the use of the Mayor and Commonalty, in the transaction of their business, was probably one of the earliest public buildings in the new City; of this structure a part was used as a prison, of which the custody was confided to the sergeant of the Bishop.”
CHAPTER IV.

THE SALISBURY GUILD OF ST. GEORGE.

Although Saint George was canonized at the end of the V. century, it was not until the XIII. century that he was accounted the Patron Saint of England, and a day assigned for his festival in the English Calendar. After this date the red cross of St. George upon its silver shield was displayed upon the Royal banner of the English Kings, and the ships of the English merchants bore his cross as they set forth from our ports to the conquest of commerce. In the XIV. century many Guilds were named after him, and in the following century London and each of the cities and larger towns in England had its Guild of St. George; their pageants and processions were incomplete without the Knight and the vanquished dragon.

It is very difficult to deal separately with the Salisbury Corporation and the Merchant Guild in the XIV. and XV. centuries. As Hatcher says, they become merged or "united in the Guild of St. George," which either consisted of or included the seventy-two members of the Corporation, viz., the twenty-four (aldermen) and the forty-eight (assistants). This body may be described as a social hierarchy organized on the principle of selection from above, and the members recruited their numbers by co-option. In case of a vacancy occurring in the ranks of the forty-eight by death, or by the elevation of one of the number to Aldermanic rank, the Council selected from among the substantial freemen of the City some "sad and discreet person" to fill the vacancy. A very substantial fine was inflicted on the member so chosen if he refused to accept the position. Fees were also paid by those chosen, to the Chamber, the clerk, and the sergeants-at-mace. The Mayor was always elected from the twenty-four. The Guild had its own altar, and maintained a priest as Guild Chaplain, who not only had a seat at the Mayor's table at the expense of the Corporation, but also received from the Council a salary, an allowance of cloth for his clothing, and a chamber, the property of the Corporation, situated in St. Thomas' Cemetery, rent free.

A confraternity of a similar kind and under the same Patron Saint existed at Leicester. The Corporation of that town consisted of the same classes and the same number as that at Salisbury, viz., the twenty-four and the forty eight.

The Saint George's Guild in Norwich received their first Charter in 1324:—"In the Worschepe of the Fader, Sone, and the Holy Goost, and of ooure Lady Seynt Mary, and of the glorious Martyr Seynt George, and all Goddis holy. There was begonne a Fraternite, the yer of our Lorde MCCCXXIII., the yer of the Regne of King Edward the Seconde after the Conqueste XVIIL, in the Cathedral Chirche aforne the heie Awter, aforne the Trinite on the South Syde in Norwych."*

We learn from the records of this Guild that "At an assembly holden the Monday next before the Feast of All-Saints, in the IX. year of Henry IV.

* Norfolk Archaeology, Vol. III., 1852.
(1408) it was agreed to furnish the Priests with Copes, and that the George should go in procession and make a conflict with the Dragon, and to keep his estate both days."

Whilst at Salisbury there is a record of a Mayor as early as 1261, the citizens of Norwich did not obtain authority to choose a Mayor until 1437, and it was not until fourteen years later, viz., in 1451, that the Corporation and the Merchant Guild in that City became united in one body. The Norwich Guild records are more complete than those of Salisbury, and from them we may form some idea of the way in which the unification took place in the latter City one hundred and forty-five years earlier. The Norwich indentures, which are known as "Judge Yelverton's Mediation," were executed by the parties on March 27th, 1451; and from the short extract which follows, it will be seen that the Guild yearly chose the Mayor of the City to serve as Alderman of the Guild for the year following his Mayoralty, and that every citizen who was appointed a member of the Corporation became a brother of the Guild.

"This writing endented made the xxvii. day of March, the year of the reigne of King Henry the VI., the XXXth; betwixt the Mayre, shreves, and coalte of the cite of Norwyche on the on part, and the Alderman and the bretheren of the Gylde of the glorious Martyr Seynt George of the seid cite, of the other part, by the mediacon and diligencay of William Yelverton, Justice of our Lord the King of his own place; Witnesseth that, as well the seid Mayre, Shreves, and Commonatte, as the forseid Alderman and Bretheren of the seid Gylde, both accordet of all matters had or meved betwixt them before thys in manner and fourm as ys in the articles hereafter shewyn." . . . "First, for to begynne to the worship of God, ooure Lady, and of the glorious Martyr Seynt George." . . . "Also, on the mornynge next after the solemnity of the seid Gyld kept in the worship of the glorious Martyr Seynt George, the Bretheren of the seid Gyld and theyr successors schall yerly chose the Maire of the seid cite and that tyme beying a Brother of the seid Gyld for all the year next folowyng after hys discharge of his office of Mayoralte, as sone as he hys discharged of his seid office of Mayoralte then forthwyth to take the charge and occupacon of the seid office of Aldermanship of the seid Fraternite and Gyld; and so every person chosen to be Maire yereley after he hath occupied Mayralte be an hole yere, to occupy the seid Aldermanship of the seid Gyld; and in case he refuse to occupie the seid Aldermanship after hys Mairalte, to paye unto the seid Fraternite C.s. to the use of the seid Glyde, and that the olde Alderman stand still Alderman unto the tyme another be chose unto the seid offyce of Alderman of the seid Gyld. And yf the Alderman of the seid Gyld hap to dye withinne the yere, that then the Meyre for the tyme beying occupie the offyce of Alderman for hys tyme and so forthe the next yere folowyng accوردying to this Act. And that all the Aldermen of the seid cite that now are and shalbe in tyme comying shal be made Bretheren of the seid Gyld without charge of the fest. Also that every man that ys or shal be chosen to be of the Comon Counsell of the seid cite be admitted also to be a brother of the seid Gyld yf it like hym; and that by great diligence and deliberation had, as well as for the Worschepe of the seid cite, as of the seid Gyld that no man be chosen to the seid Comon Councelle but such as are and seeme for to be able and suffycient of discretion and good disposicion, and that every man that shall be receyved a Brother into the seid Gyld shal be sworn and receyve hys othe in fourme that folowithe.”

Documents still in existence show that the annual procession of the George in that city before the Reformation was of a most gorgeous character. It took place on the 23rd of April, which day was set apart in the Romish Calendar for celebrating the festival of their patron saint. Amongst the muniments at Norwich is one containing an inventory made in 1468 of the apparel worn by those taking part in the Saint George’s procession, which shows that there was not only a superb dress for the use of the person who represented Saint George, but also a costume for the representative of the lady of the Guild—Saint Margaret. There was an order made by the Norwich Corporation after the suppression of the Guilds in 1553, "That ther shall be neyther George not Margett, but for pastime the dragon is to come in and shew himself as in other yeres."

The Salisbury Corporation Ledger contains an entry, made in the 8th year of Henry V. (1428), which ordains that if the Chaplain of St. George's Guild should fall ill, the Mayor should pay him for every week of his confinement to bed xii.d.*

The same book contains the record of several Convocations held in the early part of the XV. century for making an assessment of the City for the purpose of defence, and also for providing armed men and money for the King's forces. Each Guild in the City appears to have sent two delegates, whose names are recorded in the book, to these meetings. The Merchant Guild, which always appears first in the list of Guilds, were represented upon these occasions by men such as John Halle, William Swayne, and William Hore, who were among the chief aldermen of the City, and each of whom served the office of Mayor more than once.

William Hore and John Halle also represented the City in the Parliament which was summoned by Henry VI. to meet at Reading on March 6th, 1452; and we read with great interest that on the 18th of April, 1454, King Henry VI. signed a mandate directed to the Mayor and bailiffs of the "Cite of Salisburie," enjoining them to pay to the burgesses, John Halle and William Hore, the sum of thirty-two pounds four shillings for "their expences in coming to Parliament, in staying there, and in returning thence to their own houses, viz., for one hundred and sixty-three days, each of the aforesaid John and William receiving two shillings per day". It may be explained that in the seventh year of the reign of Edward II. (1307–27), when Members of Parliament were paid for their services, the rate of payment was fixed either by prior usage, or by an ordinance, at four shillings a day to each Knight of a Shire, and two shillings a day to each citizen or burgess of a city or borough who was chosen as a representative to the House of Commons. The value of four shillings and two shillings was then at least eight or nine times as great as it is at present, so that the payment would be equal to at least thirty-six shillings and eighteen shillings respectively per day. On the last day of each Session a writ was issued to each member setting forth the number of his attendances, and on this basis his payment was calculated. This arrangement for the payment of members would insure a full House to the close of the Session, as a representative departing without his certificate forfeited his salary.

* The newly elected Mayor was required to give three bucks and a hogshead of wine towards the St. George's feast.

Some of the Salisbury merchants are described in the Ledger as Mercers, others as Drapers, Grocers and Haberdashers. Ditchfield, in his work before alluded to, informs us that "Mercer" is derived from the Latin Mercator a merchant, one who dealt in goods, such as linen cloth, buckram, fustian, satins, jewels, cotton, silk, drugs, wine, salt, &c. The same authority tells us that Draper signified a maker of woollen cloth, and not as at the present time, a dealer; to "Drape" then meant to manufacture cloth, and is derived from the French "drapperie," which signifies cloth work. There is reason to suppose that the descriptions Draper and Clothier at one time applied to the same trade, but subsequently the name Clothier became more general in Salisbury, when possibly a Draper was a merchant who dealt in cloth, and a Clothier was a merchant who sold the produce of his own looms.

It has been suggested that the name "Grocer" originally signified one who dealt. Engros = wholesale, as opposed to retail merchandise. Haberdashers were dealers in foreign goods, such as French gloves, Spanish girdles, daggers, swords, silver buttons, &c. One branch of trade was carried on by the haberdashers of hats, and this branch was divided into two crafts, viz., the hurriers or cappers and the hatter merchant; the other branch of the trade was composed of the haberdashers of small ware, called also millianers or milliners, because they chiefly imported goods from Milan in Italy.

During the reign of Edward the First and his two successors, the manufacture of cloth increased considerably in the various fortified towns of Flanders, and the makers from these towns were obliged to come to England for a great portion of the raw material. In the time of Edward III. a duty was levied upon all wool, sheepskins and leather that were exported from England. Certain towns were declared staple towns, in which exclusive wool markets were set up, and special ports were appointed for shipment of the wool. To these ports all merchants at the inland towns who had these commodities to export had to send their goods. At these seaport towns the produce was bonded and the duty fixed. The Rev. Edward Duke, in his Prolusiones Historicae, states that it was placed under lock and key, hence the term “the King’s staple.” After the duty was fixed the goods were then despatched to the far-famed staple town of Calais. Calais, soon after its capture by the English, became the foreign staple town, in lieu of Bruges or Antwerp. At one time the whole revenue was restricted to be taken at Calais only, where then lived the Mayor and Treasurer of “the staple” and his assistants, which honourable offices were held by Englishmen of eminence and merchants of experience. Among the places declared “staple” towns on the occasion of the great wool grant in 1338 were Winchester and Southampton. Now Salisbury in these early days, owing to its proximity to the great Plain, with its immense flocks of sheep, was one of the most important centres of the wool trade in the South of England, and also the home of several very wealthy merchants who were dealers in this commodity. The wool trade was the dominating commercial interest both at Winchester and Salisbury, but although during the latter half of the XIV. century the staple towns were frequently altered, there is little evidence to show that Salisbury ever held the position of a staple town, with its special warehouse where the wool was sampled and weighed before being despatched to Southampton, except it be the reference to a tenement called “Stapell-haul” in St. Martin’s Street, Salisbury, contained in the will of Richard Spencer in 1414; and Bishop Beauchamp’s Liber Niger, which shows a payment “from John Larde for a ten in St. Martin’s Street called ‘Stapulhal.’” The City stood high in the list of the most flourishing towns in the Kingdom, and it may be of interest to state that fifty years later, that is in 1503, Salisbury appeared ninth in the list of towns for assessment to the King, the amount of the assessment being about one-fifteenth that of the City of London. It must be remembered, however, that London's population at this time was only one hundred and twenty thousand. The order in which Professor Rogers places the towns for the 1503 assessment is as follows:—London, Bristol, York, Lincoln, Gloucester, Norwich, Shrewsbury, Oxford, Salisbury, Coventry, Hull, Canterbury, Southampton, Nottingham, Worcester, Southwark, Bath, &c. Many of Salisbury's leading citizens, who, of course, were Guild Merchants, were also "Merchants of the Staple," and several of the latter, including Webb, Hall, and Swayne, who were men of great affluence, took an important part in the civic government of the City. According to the minutes of the meetings of the Council, which are recorded in the ancient books of the Corporation, Hall and Swayne appear to have been bitter opponents in the Council Chamber. Ledger B fol., 31, contains a resolution passed at one of these meetings which says, "That several convocations having been broken up owing to the quarrels and malicious speeches made to the scandal of the City, it was ordered that whenever the Mayor should convene a convocation, no one of the 24 or of the 48 should indulge in personal invective under a penalty of 3s. 4d., and if William Swayne or John Halle shall again offend in this respect, they are to be fined 20s. for the benefit of the City, and if a second time 40s., and if a third time they shall be imprisoned." Both Halle and Swayne appear to have been men of strong character and personality. Their names are not only associated with many of the more notable events in the past history of Salisbury, but also with two of the most interesting buildings in the City of the present day, the former with the Halle of John Halle, and the latter with the beautiful Swayne's Chapel in Saint Thomas' Church. This Chapel was built by William Swayne about the year 1450. In 1461, when the tailors obtained a Charter from Edward IV., which gave them licence to found a Guild in St. Thomas' Church, he endowed two chantries, one to the Blessed Virgin Mary for his own chantry, and one to St. John the Baptist for the Tailors' Guild.

It must not be supposed that there was a Guild of Staple Merchants as distinct from the Merchant Guild. The latter included Merchants of every description, and this is clearly set forth in the Rev. E. Duke's book before alluded to, in which he explains that every Merchant, who under 27 Ed. III. chap. 1 traded in the then export commodities, was obliged to take an oath to maintain the staple laws, and thus, in contradistinction of other merchants and traders, he was denominated "a Merchant of the Staple." Hatcher, dealing with the wool trade, says:—

"An inquiry was held by the Judges in Eyre, at which evidence was taken as to those who had disobeyed the Royal commands against exporting wool, pending a settlement of a dispute between King Edward IV. and the Countess of Flanders. At this inquiry evidence was given against no less than fifteen offenders in the City of New Sarum."
The following extracts are taken from the Corporation Ledger B to illustrate the method adopted in settling a dispute between members of the Guild, or between members of the Corporation, who, as merchants and as members of the Corporation, were brethren of the fraternity of St. George:—

“Nov. 6, 1455. Award made on friday after the feast of All Saints in the xxxiv. year of the reign of Henry VI. since the conquest. Between William Swayne, Mayor of the city on the one part, and Edmund Penston, ‘gentilman,’ one of the twenty-four on the other part . . . concerninge certain tortuous, malicious moreover and perverse words and dishonest and underhand, affecting the said Mayor, and by the aforesaid Edmund perpetrated and pronounced, by virtue (of the powers) given by the aforesaid parties to the arbitrators, whose names are hereunto subscribed; namely, Thomas Freeman, John Wyot, William Hore, John Halle, William Lightfote, Simon Poye, John Wyse draper, John Wylie, John Honythorn, Thomas Payn, Robert Cove, and John Wheler.”

The award was as follows:—

“That the aforesaid Edmund shall give a bond to the aforesaid Mayor, for a pipe of Red Gascony Wine, upon the receipt of which, he shalbe forgiven. Likewise he shall pay xx₉. for a supper for the twenty-four chief-men of the city. And the words spoken as above written, were in the Chapter House of the Church of St. Mary of New Sarum, uttered by the above said Edmund, at Vespers on the feast of All Saints in the aforesaid year. . . . It was also agreed between the aforesaid William Swayne and Richard Hayne, by the award of Thomas Freeman, John Wyot, William Hore, John Halle, William Lightfote, Simon Poye, and John Wise draper, indifferently chosen to arbitrate and judge, in and about all manner of actions real or personal brought made or pending from the beginning of the world up to this day. In the acquittance between the parties aforesaid it is more fully contained. And the aforesaid Richard is pardoned so that he shall give in the Council House of the aforesaid city, a good supper to the said William and the others above written, that is to say a Cygnet, Rabbits, Woodcocks and other things, in the house aforesaid, with sufficient white Wine called ‘Must.’ And so let ther be an end and let them be good friends in future.”
The ancient rolls in the Muniment Room, which contain the City Chamberlain’s accounts for the years preceding the Reformation, show that there were in those days regular payments made by the Corporation in connection with the maintenance of their Guild of St. George. Most of these payments appear in the Mayor’s allowances. After Wages to the Mayor, £10, appears the allowance to the Mayor for the table of the Guild Chaplain, followed by the Salary of the Guild Chaplain. In some years the Chaplain’s name is given, e.g., “Item for the table of Sir John Messenger chapeleyne of Seynte George yr 53/4” ; and “Item to Sir John Messenger Chapeleyne of Seynte George for his Wages (Vadiss) 53/4.” On other occasions the charges appear as “Item ffor youwr prestis tabill 53/4” ; and “Item ffor youwr prestis Wages (Vadiss) 53/4.” The 53s. 4d. was probably a fixed charge, but there are many other entries which vary each year, e.g.:—

“Item for washing the ornaments appertaining to the Chapel of Saint George, 23.”

“Item for a missal bought for the same ‘chapeleyne,’ 68; Also in bread, wine, and wax for him, for the celebration of masses, 7/8.”

“Obits, paid for three obits, held within the city this year for the souls of the brethren and benefactors of the fraternity of St. George, as well of those alive, as of those dead, who in their life time left, gave, or assigned any goods to the Chamber of the city, which said obits were held in the Churches of St. Thomas the Martyr, St. Edmund the Bishop and St. Martin, as it appears by the bill for the same shown to and examined, 26s. 10d.”
These interesting old accounts show that there were in the early part of the XVI. century rents received from about fifty tenants of Corporation property, and that amongst the tenements owned by the Council were eight chambers situated in St. Thomas' Cemetery. Three of these chambers were occupied by the Chantry priests of St. Thomas; one by the regular Chaplain of St. Thomas' Church, one by the keeper of the goods of St. Thomas, and another by the Chaplain of Saint George's Guild. The amount of the rent in each case (10s.) is entered as received, with the exception of that for the Corporation Guild Chaplain's Chamber. In respect of this, there is the following entry:—"Chamber held there by the Chapeleyne of Synte George rent free nil." There is reason for thinking that the St. George's Guild Chapel was in St. Thomas' Church and that it probably was the Godmanstone Chapel, which was one of the earliest additions to the ancient Church, and was made before 1415 at the east end of the north choir aisle. An extract from the Corporation Ledger, which the late Mr. Swayne published some years ago in the Salisbury and Winchester Journal, appears to support the opinion that the St. George's Guild Chapel was in the Church of St. Thomas. The leaf of the book from which it is taken is very badly stained and difficult to read, which accounts for several words being missing. The extract is as follows:—"Sep. 2, 1556. Whereas *Sir John Webbe was the Mayors preeste durying his life, it is agreed that he servynge the Mayor James Andrews until Saint Thomas eve before Christmas next is licensed. . . . . then to departe his servyce for euer and hath renounced all his former graunte. *Sir Bartram Byllynge

* The priestly title of "Sir" is the shortened form of Sire: Father.
was on October 23rd chosen in his place, to have meat and drink of the Mayor, four brode yardes of cloth of the best for his lyvery yerely, and 53/4 for his wages, and he shall . . . . in Seint Thomas Church, according to the old custom, and this not to be broken, wheresoever the Mayor shall dwell.”

The Rev. Edward Duke, in his book before alluded to, speaking of ancient paintings representing Saints on the walls of old Churches, says, “Saint George, armed cap-a-pie, and destroying the dragon, such a painting was, a few years since, exposed to view, in the reparation of St. Thomas’ Church, Salisbury.”

The old Bede Roll in Ledger A, 1420, contains a long list of benefactors to the St. George's Guild: “Ffyrst ye shall pray for all the sowls whose names here follow, the which sometymes were cytenzens in the cyte of New Sar’ and in ther lyves gave any goodis mevable or onmevable as londis or tenementis to the Mayer and comnalte of ye sayd cyte. Ye shall pray for the soul of the most illustrious prince Henry IV. who gave licence to the Mayor and Commonalty to acquire lands to the value of 100 marks, for the soul of Robert Hallam lately bishop,” &c. Amongst other names mentioned in the roll is that of Margaret Godmanstone, William Teynterer, Junior, who gave by bequest, in 1376, the value of certain hereditaments to the Mayor and Commonalty, as forming the Guild of St. George, for charitable purposes, and William Ashleigh, Chaplain. The last named in the year 1413 conveyed upon his decease to the Mayor and Corporation a tenement in St. Martin’s Street, in aid of their burdens, and for the maintenance of the Chapel belonging to the confraternity of Seynte George. The Guild had its chapel festival on St. George's Day, when it carried the "Jorge harnyssed" in procession to Church, and afterwards held its "Grete feste."

Hatcher says, "The riding of the George was one of the principal solemnities of the City, as may appear by the express mention of it in an order made at the Common Hall in the 17th year of Edward IV. (1478), which enjoins all the citizens to attend the Mayor to ride against the King (viz., to meet the King), and for riding the 'George' or any other to the pleasure and worship of the town."

In the 14 Hen. VII. (1499) an order was made that everyone of the forty-eight should pay towards the upholding "Seynte George's Gilde"; those who had been chosen Chamberlain vi^d., and "they who have not been so iv^d. yearly at least."

In the year 1510 an order was made that each of the 24 were to provide two men, and each of the 48 a man, "well and cleanly harnyssed to waite on the George yearely to Church and from Church," also that a "levyrie of long gownes," scarlet for the 24 and crimson for the 48, should be provided for the feast of St. George; each member of the fraternity was ordered to pay 1s. at the feast, whether present or absent.

15 Hen. VIII. (1524). The Masters of the Gild having neglected "the riding of the George," an order was made enjoining them to do it, according to "antiente custome," between St. George's Day and Whitsunday on pain of forfeiting five pounds.
The Corporation Ledger shows that in 1525, owing to the poverty of the "Comon" chest, upon the petition of "Thomas Buge and Thomas Tailour, stewardes of ye George Feste, and Fr. Souwthe," the following order was made:— "That this citie and the inhabitants of ye same be greatley charged, and more belike to be, with great payments to the Kynges Grace; that the saide Fest for this yere shal be left, so that the saide Stewardes kepe the obbite and Masse of olde accustomed, and make the light, and bringe it to the Churche and chuse new Stewardes."

There is an entry in Ledger B, fol. 31, of a Council held in the 36th year of Henry VI. (1457), which shows that the meetings of the Corporation were held not only in the Council House, but occasionally in one of the City Churches. The entry is written, one portion in Latin and the other in English, and states that as several convocations had been broken up owing to the quarrels, discords and malicious speeches made to the great scandal of the City, after deliberation it was agreed, that whensoever the Mayor of the City or his successor should convene any Council or convocation for the City in the "hous called the Semplehous" or in any Church within the City, no one of the 24, nor any one of the society of the 48, should indulge in personal invective under the penalty of 3s. 4d. to be levied by the Chamberlain, at the mandate of the Mayor, on the chattels of those offending in this respect. The custom at this time appears to have been for the Corporation to select or appoint one of the 24 as Mayor-elect at a meeting which was held in the week following the feast of St. Matthew, and the member who was chosen then took precedence of all his brethren, except the Mayor, until the week following the feast of St. Martin, when at a further meeting, which was convened by the Mayor, the Mayor-elect was sworn in as Mayor and Magistrate before the "Seneschall of ye Bushopp." This second ceremony probably took place in the Church. Later on this custom was altered by the Charter of Edward IV. (1474), which ordained that the Mayor should be elected on All Saints' Day, and at a place chosen and appointed by the Bishop, and that only those so elected should be presented to the Seneschall or other Minister of the Bishop, and that the Mayor, standing before him, should take the oath and then should be Mayor, but not otherwise. The old "Semplehous" was close to St. Thomas' Church, and it remained standing for some years after the New Council House was erected in 1584. There are many entries in the Ledgers referring to it, one as late as September 29th, 1629, when there appears an entry:—"Ordered that William Dove is to hold two upper rooms which are used for a schoolhouse and called the old Council House in St. Thomas' Cemetery at 20s. for the year."

There is some evidence that during the 14th and 15th centuries, up to the time of the Reformation, the ceremony of the election of Mayor was held in the Church of St. Thomas, which was close to the Council House, and was also the Church in which was the Chapel of the Guild of the Mayor and Corporation.

In the year 1547 an Act was passed which gave to King Edward VI. all Chantries which the previous King, Henry VIII., had not seized. This Act also ordered a visitation of the whole of the Kingdom by Commissioners, who were empowered to put down the practice of masses for departed souls, and who were also given authority to seize and sell the plate, ornaments, and other goods belonging to all Chantries and Chapels of Guilds and fraternities. The possessions of most of the Chantries and Chapels in Salisbury were taken in 1548 by the Crown officers who visited the western counties, and sold by them in the same year to Thomas Chafyn, of Mere. An inventory of these goods and ornaments, taken from a document found amongst the papers of the late Miss Chafyn-Grove, of Zeals House, and dated June 15th, 1548, was published in the Wiltshire Archæological Magazine, vol. 22.

The Guild of St. George does not appear in this inventory, but upon the same date as the visit of these Commissioners to Salisbury there appears in the St. Thomas' Churchwardens' accounts the following entries:—“Paid to two carpenters and four labourers for taking down the George, 2/8; paid the glazier for mending the glass windows, 8/4, and for glass, 4/-; paid for breaking down the footstools of the images in the church, 22d.; paid for making clean the church after the departure of the visitors, 3/6.” Amongst the receipts appears the entry:—“For brass which was upon graves and tombs, and a laver of brass, altogether weighing 2cwt,—18/-per cwt.—36/-.” The above entry appears to show that a clean sweep was made of the coloured glass and ornamental brasses, as well as the George and other images in the Church, and furnishes additional evidence that the St. George's Guild Chapel was in St. Thomas' Church.
After the suppression of the Guild by the Commissioners in 1548, the close connection that had existed for so many years between the Mayor and Corporation and St. Thomas' Church came to an end, and the ceremony of Mayor choosing was transferred to St. Edmund's Church. A promise was given to those who opposed the adoption of the Act for the suppression of the Chantries, that wherever real public works were maintained out of the rents and properties of Guilds, in such cases the Guild lands should be restored. This promise, given by the weak and corrupt Government of the youthful King's uncle, the Protector Somerset, a Government which found it easier and more popular to rob Churches than to despoil a public body such as a Corporation of a city of their possessions, was in many cases made good. The Corporation of Salisbury, who held their possessions both as Guild Members and as a City Corporation, succeeded in preserving the whole of their property. They found favour in the eyes of the Duke of Somerset by an appeal to his sincere Protestantism, and by severing themselves entirely from every association connected with the pre-Reformation customs of their fraternity, and even from the Church which had for so many years contained their Guild Chapel.

There appears to have been some attempt during Queen Mary's reign to resuscitate the old order of things at St. Thomas' Church; e.g. an order was made by the Corporation on March 20th, 1555, as follows:—"Whereas three dirges have been yerely song heretofore within the Parish Church Seynte Thomas' in Sarum for the fownders and benefactors of this house, and for certen causes lett downe ever sithens the begynnyng of Kyng Edwarde the VIth vntill this tyme, it is concluded and agreed that the saide three dirges be yerely kepthe in the saide Churche of Seynte Thomas accordyng to the olde ordynaunces and customes, at the charge of the Chamberlaynes, and that the priests and clerks shall have of the Chamberlaynes ivd. a peece.'"

But from this time forward the Corporation are more closely connected with St. Edmund's Church, and probably the Mayor was chosen in this Church for the first time in October, 1548.

This opinion is justified by the statement made by Bishop Coldwell in a letter written in 1595, in connection with the controversy between the Bishop and the Corporation as to the election of Mayor. The Bishop claimed the right to appoint the place in which the Mayor was to be chosen, but the Corporation wished to assert their independence, and the matter was eventually referred to the Privy Council, and was decided in favour of the Bishop. The Corporation contended that for the space of 300 years they had chosen their Mayor in St. Edmund's Church, and that the Mayor took an oath before the Bishop, out of courtesy and reverence, and not of necessity. Amongst the documents in the Muniment Room of the City of Salisbury is the answer of the Bishop to the Corporation, dated November 11th, 1595, which is as follows:—

"Yt is not true that by the space of 300 yeares or halfe one hundred yeares ye May'r hath been chosen in ye Churche of Saint Edmondes or that there hath been any suche number of ye xxiiij to choose ye Maior, but lately yt hathe been so done directlee against an ancient Charter made by Kinge Edward ye ffourth and confirmed by her Mat'ce w'ch is that ye Maior should be chosen at a place appointed by ye bishopp out of ye cittizens of New Sar'm, but ye bishopp holdeth it irreligious to pr'fane a churche w'th suche tulmultious noyes as is usuall is such ellecons and therefore nev'r appointed ye churche to be ye place of that electing."

The decision of the Privy Council, which, as we have said, was in favour of the Bishop, left the citizens in a very discontented frame of mind, and after the accession of James I., the Corporation increased their efforts to obtain the assistance of powerful friends at Court, who could help them in procuring for the City a Charter of Incorporation. In this they were successful, thanks to the support given to them by Sir Robert Cecil, who at this time was Secretary of State. Sir Robert, who was the second son of the great Lord Burleigh, and who was created Viscount Cranborne in 1604 and Earl of Salisbury in 1605, had been connected with the City. The house in which he lived still stands in the Close, where the old crest of the Cecils, a sheaf supported by two rampant lions, is still to be seen on the cornice over the fireplace in one of the rooms. He died in May, 1612, only a few months after the City had received its Charter from King James I., which put an end to the strife between the Corporation and the Ecclesiastical Authorities. Bishop Coldwell died a few months after the date of the letter to which we have referred, and the vacancy in the See was not filled for two years. The ceremony of the election of Mayor continued to be held in St. Edmund's Church certainly all through the 17th century. Upon several occasions, when the plague was raging in the streets adjoining St. Edmund's Church, the ceremony was held elsewhere. In 1579 it was held in St. Thomas' Church, in 1604 at the New Council House, and in 1664 in the Close of the Cathedral, by authority of a licence from the King.
CHAPTER V.

THE MERCHANTS' COMPANY.

At the beginning of the XV. century, as the number of craft fraternities increased, the ancient Merchant Guilds diminished in power and number. There does not appear to have been any conflict between the Salisbury merchants and craftsmen, such as took place in other cities, but the decline of the ancient organisation, and the rise of the Craft Guilds, reflected the contest between the industrial interests of the small manufacturing master and the commercial interests of the aldermen and the more important merchants who held control of the ruling Guild. As the real supervision of the trade gradually fell into the hands of the Craft Guilds, the merchant who was a craft master, that is, one who had learnt by apprenticeship the manual side of his craft, and had risen in the social scale, and had become a manufacturing merchant, now became a member of a Craft Guild, which included the trade of which he was a master. Later on this became the general rule, more especially during the reign of Elizabeth, when, owing to the disorganisation of the Guilds after the suppression of their Chantries in the preceding reign, they were re-organised upon a broader basis as trade companies, which included both the dependant class of small master craftsman and the capitalist master. In this way the merchant was able to use his influence in providing rules and regulations, to prevent careless or fraudulent workmanship on the part of the workman, and the use of defective material on the part of the small master artisan. There are amongst the paintings in the Council House the portraits of several of the merchants of the old City, who were also members and benefactors of the Trade Guilds, viz., Charles Wotton, Mayor of Salisbury in 1583, and who, as the inscription on the picture tells us, "'gau tenne poundes for euer to the Corporation of Wevers"; William Windover, Merchant, who in 1630 gave £50 each to the Company of Shoemakers and the Company of Bakers; Phillip Crew, who in 1638 gave his house (commonly known as Crew's Hall, in Rollestone Street) to the Company of Shoemakers, for their Hall; and Lawrence Tippott, who gave, in 1675, "To the Shoemakers in Sarum, £50." These interesting portraits of Salisbury Merchants adorned at one time the walls of some of the old halls of the Trade Companies in the City.

The Merchants head the list of the Salisbury Companies that were re-organised in 1562, when the orders and constitutions of each Company (including the Merchants) were sanctioned by the Mayor and Corporation. The only exceptions were the Corporation of Tailors, who had purchased their freedom, and became incorporated by Royal Charter in the preceding century, and succeeded in obtaining a confirmation of their privileges from both Queen Mary and Queen Elizabeth; and also the Corporation of Weavers, which received two Charters from Elizabeth, the first in 1562 and the second in 1590.
The Company of Merchants, as re-constituted, now included all those traders who dealt in commodities which they did not make, the export and import merchants, the grocer, the mercer, the vintner, the woolmonger, &c. The Crafts’ Companies were composed of those who were engaged in the home industries, such as weavers, tailors, cordwainers, joiners, skinners, &c., &c.

There is a most interesting book in the Muniment Room which contains the names and occupations of between five and six hundred citizens, in connection with the fund which was raised in 1612 to pay the cost of obtaining the Charter of James I. The inscription on the first page of this book is as follows:

“1612, Civitas Novae Sarum: A remembrance of the voluntarye contribucon of the several companyes of the citizens of the sayde cittie towards the chardge of the procuringe of the incorporacon of the sayde cittie and confirmacon of their former liberties by the Kinges mats. most gracious letters patents under the greate seale of England made the seconde daye of Marche in the nynthe yeare of the raigne of our gracious soveigne Lord James by the Grace of God Kings of England, France, and Ireland, and of Scotland the xlvth &c. Wherein firste ar mencioned the sevrall companyes, and then the names of evrye person of that Companye that hath geven anye thinge and the sevrall somes by them geven and then the names of suche as ar able to geve and have lyved in the town and have geven nothinge, and lastlie the names of the poore persons of evrye companye that deserve well in respecte of their behavior to be of the companyes and ar not able to geve anye thinge.”

The first list in this book contains the names of the merchants, mercers, grocers, apothecaries, goldsmiths, linen-drappers, &c., with donations ranging from 60s. to 20s. each. Next follow the craftsmen, each trade being kept separate. After the craftsmen come “Corporacions,” i.e., Fraternities which had been incorporated by Royal Charter, and as such were quite distinct from the Guilds, or rather Companies, as they were called, by an Act passed in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, and which received their orders and constitutions from the Mayor and Corporation. The "Corporacions" were the Tailors, who subscribed from their Guild funds £10, and the Weavers, who gave from their funds £6. The next page is headed "And others of Quallytye." There are about 50 names under this qualification, and many of these were merchants, clothiers, &c., the sums given by each ranging from £5 down to 10s., in addition to which the 24 aldermen gave £5 and the 48 councillors £2 each towards the same object.

Under the Charter of James I, the whole of the Trade Companies in the City were reconstituted by the Town Council, and no one was allowed to trade in the City unless he had received the freedom of the City and was a member of one of the Companies. The orders and constitutions of the Company of Merchants were the first to receive the sanction of the Mayor under this Charter, and are dated November, 1612. The Company, as reconstituted, included mercers, grocers, apothecaries, goldsmiths, drapers, upholsterers, and embroiderers. Their officers consisted of one chamberlain, two stewards, one clerk, and one yeoman.* These officials were to be elected on the Wednesday before the feast of St. Bartholomew, and the annual feast was to be held on the Wednesday after the feast of Vincula-Petri, or Lammas-day. The brethren were to appoint one or two of the "antient and most discreet of every trade of the Companye," to assist the officials, and they were to view, see, and search the wares, merchandise, weights and measures of every brother and sister of the Company, and they were given power to proceed to recover a fine in cases where unlawful wares, weights or measures were found. On July 16th, 1647, we find a petition from the Wardens and Brethren of the Company of Merchants to the Mayor and Corporation, asking that all persons trading in the City who were not freemen should be sued, and on February 18th, 1675, new orders were granted to the Merchants' Company.

The following extracts are taken from these 1675 constitutions, which are the only orders of the Merchants in the Salisbury Corporation Muniment Room:

"Civitas Nove Sarum." Orders and Constitutions for the Companye of Merchants, Mercers, Grocers, Apothecaries, Goldsmiths, Linen Drapers, Milliners, Vintners, Upholsterers, Embroiderers, made on Friday the eighteenth day of February in the eight and twentieth yeare of the raigne of our Sou'raigne Lord Charles the seconde &c. No. 26. The usual proviso giving the Mayor and Corporation power to alter the orders and constitutions.

On the 16th March, 1690, the Corporation ordered "That the Constitutions and orders of the Company of Merchants within this City be renewed and confirmed, that Society having been sometime discontinued," also that the Corporate Seal be attached to the Constitutions of the Company of Merchants.

Again, in 1701, an order was made to seal the Merchants' orders, which were granted in 1675.

Little or nothing of importance is to be found respecting the Salisbury Merchants' Company after this date.

In 1786 a Salisbury Commercial Society was formed to protect and promote the general trade interests of the City. Thomas Ogden was President, and the Society was supported by the traders generally.

Probably owing to the great expansion of trade which took place in the XVIII. century, which entirely altered the conditions of commercial life, this Society took the place of the Salisbury Company of Merchants.
CHAPTER VI.

THE SALISBURY CRAFT GUILDS.

The rise of the Craft Guilds in Salisbury took place either at the end of the XIV. century or the beginning of the XV. century. A certain amount of co-operative enterprise had been inherent in the Crafts from the earliest times, and this it was, probably, which induced the craftsmen engaged in each particular trade to settle in the same street or part of a town for convenience, the common use of tools, and the joint acquisition of raw material. Consequently, parishes were composed, to a certain extent, of men engaged in the same trade with their families. Parish Guilds were very general at this time, and we find in some of the ancient cities and towns, more especially in those which contained a large number of small parishes, that the fraternity of the Parish Church became the fraternity of the craft which had established itself in the parish. One of the most striking features in the early topography of mediæval cities, both in England and on the Continent, as at Bruges, is the localization of trades in streets named after them. Thus the ancient City of Salisbury had not only a Butcher Row and a Fish Row, both of which have come down to the present day, but there were also in those days "Wheelers' Row," near the Wool Market, now the Canal; "Ironmonger Row," the present Oatmeal Row; "Smiths' Row," in Winchester Street; "Cord-wainers’ Row,” which occupied the north side of the portion of Minster Street, now known as Silver Street; “Potrewe” or “Pot Row” (the Pewterers’ Row), on the south side of the present Silver Street, and Cooks’ Row in Castle Street. The craftsmen of each trade, working under these conditions, and living together as near neighbours, would naturally desire to organise themselves, to act together, and to worship together, so that, by their united efforts, they could obtain for themselves a stronger position, and one which would enable them to defend and protect their interests. In the past these interests had been completely dominated by the ruling class, who, united in their Merchants’ Guild, occupied a very strong position. It must be understood that the term craftsmen signified a trade or calling generally, and included the well-to-do shopkeeper and trader who had served an apprenticeship to the manual side of his craft, as well as the poorer craftsman who could not afford to rent a shop, and, therefore, had either to hawk his wares or sell them to the shopkeeper. This desire for mutual protection on the part of the craftsmen resulted in the various trades forming themselves into fraternities. Each Guild had its own priest, maintained lights before its Guild altar, and provided a hearse-cloth, which was used at the burial of a brother of the “Mysterie.” The attendance of the Guild brethren at the funeral of a deceased member was always regarded as a serious duty. Tapers and torches were provided by the Guild, and a fine, usually one pound of wax, was inflicted on those members who neglected to attend at the dirge on the day before, and at Mass on the day of the funeral. The Guild pall was used upon these occasions for the purpose of doing honour to the memory of the departed brother. Many of these hearse-cloths, some of which were described as being "beautiful specimens of the broyderer's art," were destroyed at the time of the suppression of the Chantries. Others were apparently hidden away until the reign of Queen Mary, when they were again brought into use. During the Commonwealth, in 1645, hearse-cloths were ordered to be destroyed. Some of them, described as "embroydered with gould and Popish-images," were ordered to be burnt by "Mr. Maior, as being contrary to the late ordinance of Parliament." In some cases the members of a Guild all belonged to one trade, but there were other Guilds which included the craftsmen and women of several different trades. The fraternities controlled all matters relative to the particular trade or trades of those included in the Guild, such as the admissions and the conditions of service of apprentices, and the punishment by fine and otherwise of those Guild brothers who infringed the rules and customs. Round these Guilds the social life of the workpeople of the City chiefly centred. The manual workmen (journeymen) also combined to protect their interests as regards wages and hours of labour, and in some cases they appear to have become organised and affiliated to the Craft Guild, e.g., the Salisbury Tailors' ordinances which were made in 1444 show that there were stewards for the journeymen as well as stewards of the masters:—"Also the Stewardes on Mydsom'es euen shulle lete straw with green Seynte Johnnys Chapell . . . and a morwe to ordeyne the mynstrell to go aboute the citie, and the Stewardes of the jornemen, with their Mynstrell, with the Stewardis of the Maisteres aboue sayde . . . and to charge the Stewardes of the jornemen and alle there ffelawshipp to be there upon payne of ii lb. of wex to bere yn the lyght, and the Stewardis of the Maisteres to gyve to the lyght tend iiiid.”

In 1415, before the battle of Agincourt, the Salisbury Guilds were called upon to assist the Corporation in meeting the demand made upon the City by King Henry V. to provide him with 100 marks, and also a number of “hobblers, archers, and other defensible men,” who were to join the King’s forces, then on the march, and which were to pass through Salisbury on their way to Southampton, where they were to embark for France. During the same reign the Privy Council wrote, directing the Mayor and Corporation to make an examination of the defences of Salisbury, and at the convocation which was shortly after called to consider the matter there were present, in addition to the members of the Corporation, representatives of some of the Craft Guilds. At this meeting it was decided to make, as an additional defence, a big ditch round the City, and also to strengthen the existing barriers and gates, and the Guilds were ordered to assist in this matter.

It may be explained that the Charter of Henry III. (1227) granted to the Bishop and his successors power to enclose the City with competent trenches, and to hold it as their own domain. At a later date Robert Wyvell, who was appointed Bishop in 1329, appears to have had considerable differences with the Mayor and Commonalty respecting his Court in his Guildhall, and other matters. This dispute resulted in an appeal to the King, who decided against the citizens, and inflicted a fine upon them of 3000 marks, but in 1356 they made their humble submission to the Bishop, and through his intercession the King released the City from the heavy penalty which he had imposed upon them for "certain contempts."

The improved relations which existed between Bishop Wyvell and the citizens after this time is shown by the Charter which he gave them in 1367. This Charter grants to "our beloved in Christ the Mayor and our free citizens and to the Co'inalty of the Citty . . . that they may shut in our said Citty with ditches and other municones and fortifications as in the said deede more at large appeareth, and to fortify the said Citty with four gates and the same soe fortified to keepe and sustaine for eu'r, and that the Mayor, Cittizens and Co'inalty may digge of our soyle round about ye Citty to ye bредth of eyght perches of our grounde by us limited to the making of ye aforesaid ditch, and yt they may keepe the said ditch . . . for eu'r, and the same ditch to clense when and as often as it shallbe need or yt shall seeme to them expedient; the Lo'shippe of the soyle of the said ditch to us and to our successors alwayes reserved. . . . And yt ye Mayor, Cittizens . . . unto the four gates yerely may chuse four keepers to keep safe the said gates."

Ledger A 18 of Henry VI. gives a complete list of the Guilds, with the names of the Wardens and the various trades included in each Guild. The date of this entry is September, 1440, and it shows how rapid must have been the growth of the Craft Guilds during the preceding 20 years. The entry referred to is the minutes of a meeting called by the Corporation in connection with the raising of the money to pay for completing the great ditch. At this meeting there were present, in addition to the ordinary members, two representatives of each Trade Guild in the City. These were probably the Wardens of the various Guilds.

The list of the Guilds, Trades and Wardens is rather indistinct, as the pages of the ancient ledger are badly stained, owing probably to the fire at the old Council House in 1780, from which the ledgers were saved. The first part of the entry is written in Latin and the second part in English. It will be noticed from the list that whilst some of the more important of the trades had their own Guild, in other cases more than one trade was included in a Guild. The Carpenters' Guild included no less than seven distinct trades. The list is as follows:

For making the ditch.

Those elected for the Mercers, Grocers and Drapers

Fullorum (Fullers)

Sutor Currios (Shoemakers and Curriers)

In continuation of the report of the same meeting there is a list of donations received, and also the names of the donors. Then follow complete lists of the names of the members of the various Guilds, each Guild forming a separate entry. Apparently these names were taken for the purposes of an assessment in connection with paying for the ditch.

The Churchwardens’ accounts of St. Edmund’s, Salisbury, for the year 1449—50, show that at this time artisans engaged in the building trades, viz., carpenters, masons, helliers, &c., were paid vi d a day, and the labourers who served them received iv d.*

It may also be of interest to notice the names of a few of the parishioners which appear in these ancient accounts, e.g.—

John the cooke vppon the ditche
William the spurryer
Gaston Quarrier
Xpfor Pewterer
John hellyer
Kettle the plumber
Bartlynier Glover
Batten the joyner
Margery silkwoman &c.

Ledger B also contains a long and interesting entry respecting the old City Guilds. In November, 1474, Edward IV. sent a demand to Salisbury requesting the Corporation to furnish him with 24 armed men for the King’s Army against France. This was for the expedition which crossed the Channel in the spring of 1475

* The value of money being about 25 times its value at the present day.
to endeavour to recover Normandy from Louis XI., and resulted in Edward accepting from the French a King large sum of money to retire from France. The report in the old Ledger shows that in answer to the King’s demand a Convocation was held on December 17th, 1474, at which there were present, in addition to the members of the Corporation, officials representing the various Guilds, who were called upon to take the oath, “as it appeareth in the boke in the Cownsell howse ... Every craft was charged of the which 24 men, 12 men were harneyseyd and sent forthe under Sir Edward Darrell Knt. of the which 12 men were send forthe, by such crafts as her folloathe ... and after that tyme it pleased the Kyngs grace to write to the Mayre and to the comyms to make redy and to harneyse L men to be redy by a day to do hym servus at the see, of the whch L men ht hath plesyd his grace to relese XX men, and to send forth XXX abull men and to harneyse them at the charge of the Cyte, which were send forth the XXV day of Februar Anno IIIIto (1475), and thees be the names of such crafts of the Cyte as send forth the said XXX men harneyseyd. At which season it was aggreyd that every craft should dowbull theyre fyrst Sessyng (the original 24 demanded) which shold amount to XLVIII men whereof as ht apperith at two tymes (that is the two previous occasions when 12 and 30 men were sent respectively) were sent forthe XLII men, and so there rest upon dyvrs crafts VI men to harneysh which crafts hereafter foloathe.” There are three lists, the first of 12 men, the second of 30 men, and the third of six men. The first list was as follows:—

The Mercers a man
" Taylours " " "
" Bochers " " "
" Sadullers " " "

Among the allowances made to William Wootton, Mayor in 1464, are several sums for the equipment of men for the King’s service, including:—For a Standard xxiii. iv.; for 34 Jackets with the sign of S, and for ffustian sherying and lynynge iv. x. j. Henry Swayne, one of the 24 (aldermen), was Captain of this force.

In the year 1458 there appears an interesting entry respecting the Barber Surgeons, which shows that the premises, now occupied by Mr. Powney, at the corner of Minster and Silver Streets, and the property of the Municipal Charity Trustees, was left by will by a member of this fraternity. The property is described as the corner tenement opposite the "pultricrosse." It was left to the Trinity Hospital by John Wynchestre, barber, after the death of his wife Agnes, on condition that the Master and brothers and sisters of the said Hospital, should hold his obit. for his soul and for the soul of Agnes his wife, on Friday in the first week in Lent, in the Church of St. Thomas the Martyr, when they should pay to the priest, and to the poor in that Church 20 pence to be equally divided amongst them, and also to the Wardens of the Fraternity of Barbers in the same City for their lights 12 pence. Among the rules of the Barber-Surgeons was one forbidding unskilful persons to 'take or meddle with any cure of chirurgery.' Another rule provided that, "For the better increase of skill and knowledge among the chirurgeons and barbers of this City the wardens of the guild upon making request to the Mayor and Justices, might have the body of any executed felon to make an anatomy thereof. On June 25th, 1493, the Corporation made an order that the Wardens of every Craft should bring in a list of the names of every householder "belonging to his crafte on Sunday next under the penalty of 20s."
At this time there appears to have been four distinct forces at work regulating trade in the interests of the whole community. First, the Crown by legislative or executive process; secondly, the Municipal body by virtue of the liberties and free customs conceded to them by the Crown; thirdly, the Merchants’ Guild representing the customs and interests of the Merchants; and lastly, the Crafts’ Guilds, by which the regulations of trade were conducted. Each Craft was kept quite distinct, and a man who made bows could not provide arrows or strings for them. So also four separate Crafts contributed to the making of a finished saddle and bridle. The joiner made the woodwork, which was decorated by the painter; the saddler supplied the leather, and the lorimer the metal trappings and appointments. Amongst the rules made by some of the Guilds at this time was one which ordered that no member should begin his work before sunrise, or continue it after curfew. He was also forbidden to work on Church festivals, or after noon on the eve of a double feast. Each member was required to promise to help any brother craftsman to finish a piece of work if need arose, at the request of the Master of the Guild. Another rule provided that no member should go to law with his Guild brother, until after the dispute had been laid before the Wardens of his Guild, whose duty it was to arbitrate between the disputants. No one was admitted a member unless the Guild officers were satisfied both as to the candidate’s moral character and his efficiency as a workman, and any member impoverished by misfortune had a claim to relief from his Guild.
The preceding extracts show that there were certain national duties imposed on the fellowships of the Crafts, e.g., whenever a demand was made upon the City to provide men or money for the King's service, the Mayor, as the representative of the Crown, issued precepts to the various Guilds in the City, requiring them each to provide their quota according to an assessment in force at the time. A considerable share of the quota was paid by the present and past Masters of a Guild, and a payment of viid. or xiid. by each of the remaining members of the Guild provided the balance.

The Mayor's authority over the Guilds is best seen in connection with the Municipal duties which were imposed on the Guilds; e.g., on the initiative of the Mayor, precepts were issued for the Crafts to take part in cleansing the City ditch, or to provide men and horses to attend him when he rode to meet the King, or a requisition to attend the annual riding of the "George," the Midsummer Watch, or the pageant on St. Osmund's eve.

A full account of the arrangements that were made by the Salisbury Corporation to provide a grand cavalcade, to meet Henry VII. and his Queen upon the occasion of their visit to their palace at Clarendon in 1496, appears in Ledger B. This procession, which was appointed to meet their Majesties, on the Great Western Road, one mile beyond Harnham, included the officials and a certain number of the members of each Trade Guild, the number of Guilds being the same as in the list referred to in 1474. At this period the ceremony of keeping the Midsummer Watch ("Nativity of St. John the Baptist"), which was the earliest in origin of all the festivals, and the watches on St. Osmund's night, St. Peter's night, &c., were observed in Salisbury, and we are told by various writers that upon these occasions the pageants were gorgeous. The custom in connection with these festivities appears to have been for each Guild to supply a certain number of armed men, viz., bowmen, "to awayte vpon the Mayre yn the watche everye of the sayde nights." Upon these occasions the Mayor and Corporation led the imposing procession. After the Cresset-bearers with their torches, Henchmen (armed men), Trumpeters on horseback, the Guild banner and the "Minstral Wayts," came the Mayor and his brethren, robed in scarlet and mounted on horseback. The effigy of St. George was borne in their procession, escorted by the men in harness, archers in coats of white fustian carrying their bows, and with sheaves of arrows by their side, beadles and henchmen following. The armed men were provided by the members of the Corporation, each member being called upon to provide and harness a certain number of men for this purpose. The Guild of St. George was followed by the most important of the Trade Guilds, "The Tailors'." This, the fraternity of St. John the Baptist, was then the only Craft Guild in the City which was incorporated by Royal Charter, and had borne before them the figure of the Giant, now in the Salisbury Museum. The Giant was escorted by his sword-bearer and mace-bearer, and accompanied by the Morris dancers, and as some supposed by Hobnob, but on the other hand there is a tradition that Hobnob was originally part of the quaint paraphernalia of the St.
George’s Guild. The other Craft Guilds, each with their insignia and quaint emblems, some of which are still preserved in the Salisbury Museum, followed in procession, accompanied by Mummers, Morris dancers, &c.

Chambers’ Book of Days gives a lot of observances in England and Scotland on St. John the Baptist’s day. In London also much used to be made of it; indeed, Midsummer Eve seems to have been the great rejoicing time of the year. Enormous bonfires were made in the streets east and west of St. Paul’s Cathedral, on Ludgate Hill, and in Cheapside, illuminating the magnificent steeple. “Over the doorways of the houses were lamps of glass with oil burning in them all night, and some hung out branches of iron, curiously wrought containing hundreds of lamps, lighted at once. Before the houses were tables set out, on which were placed ponderous cakes, and flagons of ale, and wine unexcised by kings. Over the doors hung the delicate branches of the graceful birch, with wreaths of lilies and St. John’s wort; and there were suspended pots of the green opine, in the bending of whose leaves the maiden could read her fate in love.” Stow, in his Survey of London, gives a full and most exciting account of a clandestine excursion of Henry VIII., and his priest friend, Thomas Wolsey, on Midsummer Eve, 1510, in a dirty wherry from Westminster down the Thames, also thickly illuminated by lighted-up boats, to Bridewell, and making their way through the crowd up Ludgate to the cross in Westcheap and back, all unrecognised. The young Haroun-al-Raschid was 19 years old, Wolsey 29. It was a splendid cavalcade, according to Stow’s description, of which they were quiet spectators. At Oxford there was a specialty in the observance of a curious nature. A sermon was preached on St. John’s Day from a stone pulpit in the Court of Magdalen College, whilst the Court was decorated with green boughs “that the preaching might resemble that of the Baptist in the wilderness.”

In the year 1520 there appears to have been a disposition on the part of some of the Salisbury Guilds to hold aloof from the St. Osmund’s celebration, and by holding their feast upon that day they prevented their members taking part in the official celebration. Hatcher suggests, as a reason for this, that a change of opinion had taken place, which reflected public feeling, in regard to the doctrines and ceremonies of the Church. In 1520, at a Convocation held on the 9th of December, it was ordered that “no occupation or craft within the City shall keep their feast on the day of the revel, and one day only to continue, and the wardens of every occupation shall give knowledge to their fellowship of this act, that it be kept henceforth without interruption, on pain that any warden of whatever occupation he be, doing to the contrary, to forfeit 40 shillings to the steward and likewise 20 shillings to be paid to the use of the Chamber; and every journeyman that will not be ordered by their Masters to forfeit six shillings and eight pence.” In 1522 an order was made that the feasts of the Guilds should be stopped, the only exceptions being the Mayor’s feast and the feast of the St. George’s Guild. Two years later, in 1524, a more peremptory order was issued in connection with St. Osmund’s pageant, as follows:—“At this Convocation it is condescended that the watch on St. Osmund’s night be kept this year, as it hath been used in years past, in the best manner that may be done, and if any town dweller refuses to come to the watch, or do not his cost as his other neighbours do, after their power, he is to be punished at the Mayor’s discretion.” In 1526 another order was made threatening imprisonment to any citizen refusing to come to the St. Osmund’s revel. In 1530 the opposition to the custom appears to have grown, and the Corporation, fearing disorder from those who objected to its continuation, made an order “that the watch be kept on St. Osmund’s even in the best manner it can be done; also that every citizen and inhabitant within the City for him and his servants, shall have clubs in their houses, each of the 24 six clubs, and every other person as many as shall be needful and expedient for his household.” Again, in 1532, the order appears that the watch on St. Osmund’s eve should be kept, and that the members of every craft in the City should apparel themselves in the best manner and come to the watch in time. In 1534 the same order was made, with an addition that every craft should bring forth as many harnessed men as they could to the honour of the City, and they were to be ready to give their attendance before the Mayor in the Market Place at seven o’clock, under pain of imprisonment.

The following extract respecting St. Osmund’s pageant is from a full quotation which Hatcher gives from the Harleian MSS. in the British Museum of a petition which was sent in 1537 by the Mayor and Commonalty of New Sarum to Thomas Cromwell (Earl of Essex) respecting their grievances against Bishop Shaxton, and also on the subject of their favourite pageant:—

"And farther it may please you to be advertised, that it hath been accustomed, upon the eve of St. Osmund, being the 15th day of July, which Saint lieth in the Cathedral Church of Sarum, as St. Edward doth in Westminster, on the which St. Osmund's eve a solemn watch hath been used, after the order of the watch kept in London and Windsor, even to the which watch much people hath accustomed to resort unto. And the morrow was wont to be kept holiday. And because that the said St. Osmund's day is now commanded not to be kept holiday, where it shall be meet to have the said watch to be kept, and used or not, we most humbly desire your good lordship's pleasure therein, what is meet to be done, and that we may be instructed herein by the bearer hereof; and we shall always be ready to accomplish the same, according unto our bounden duty, as knoweth the blessed Trinity, who ever more preserve your good lordship, with increase of much honor. At Sarum 7th day of June. By your Beadesmen, the Mayor and his brethren of the City of New Sarum."

Two years later, viz., in 1539, it was ordered that St. Osmund's watch should be kept and observed "as in antient tymes," and that all Innholders, who had no occupation (Guild) should each provide and send one "harneyssed" man to assist the constables.

This ancient custom was abolished by Henry VIII., and at a meeting of the Corporation in July, 1545, "Itt is agreed that the watche on St. Osmund's nighte be noe more observed nor kepte, for certayne causes." It was during this reign, 1531, that an Act, directed against an abuse which had grown up in the Craft Guilds, of preventing journeymen and apprentices, who had served their seven years' apprenticeship, from starting in business on their own account, was passed. The Guilds in this way had done their best to stop competition and individual enterprise, and had seriously imperilled the expansion and prosperity of the towns and cities. In the year 1537 another order was made respecting the feasts of the Guilds, which in 1522 had been ordered to be discontinued, and this last order reflected the change in opinion which brought about the abolition of the St. Osmund’s watch. Hatcher suggests that it looks as if the custom of offering lights was discontinued at this time. The order made was, "That the Guilds should keep their feast, one day for the Masters, and one day for the journeymen, only at the time accustomed, that is to say, when they used to bring in their lights." When the Act for the dissolutions of Colleges, Chantries, and Free Chapels (37 Henry VIII.) was passed, all Guilds were required to make a return of their Chantries and the goods and ornaments belonging to them, and these were subsequently confiscated. The great London Companies were rich enough to buy out of their own funds the estates and other property which the State had deprived them of. In a similar way many of the more wealthy of the Trade Guilds in the large towns survived, losing only their Chantries and Chapels with their ornaments, and that portion of their revenue that had been devoted to the maintenance of their Chantries. Amongst such were the Salisbury Guild of Weavers, and the Salisbury Guild of Tailors, the Chantry possessions of both of which were seized and sold in 1548.
CHAPTER VII.

FORMATION OF THE CITY COMPANIES.

During the reign of Queen Elizabeth the Craft Guilds, which had become disorganised on account of the suppression of their Chantries and Chapels by the Council of Edward VI., formed themselves into Companies. The experience of the Craft Guilds was embodied in Parliamentary enactments binding on the whole Kingdom. The result was, that the Companies so formed were of a wider character than the old Guilds which they superseded, and they included not only the workmen of a trade, but also the masters. At the same time, many of the workmen were now their own masters, and sold the product of their labour without the intervention of a middle-man; but the price of the product was fixed by the Company, which not only made rules to prevent unfair competition between the members of the same trade, but imposed fines on those of their members who did what, in their judgment, was unneighbourly or unfair to other members of the Company. Professor Rogers, in his Industrial and Commercial History, quotes a case which he extracted from the "Archives of the London Grocers' Guild," in which a very substantial fine was imposed on two members of that fraternity, for what would be called in Ireland shop-grabbing, which was, offering a higher rent for a house and shop than the existing tenant was paying. Of course, the essence of the Guild system was the limitation of producers and traders, which would find little sympathy at the present time; but, on the other hand, one cannot but approve many of the Company regulations. The apprentice became more than ever a member of the family of his employer, who undertook not only to instruct him in his trade but to exercise supervision over his moral character. At the end of his seven years' apprenticeship the apprentice could claim to become a full citizen by paying the accustomed fees and going through certain forms. It was during Elizabeth's reign also that, owing to the general rise in prices and the revival of industrial prosperity, which made an increase of wages possible, an Act was passed that wages should be fixed annually for each district by the magistrates, after consultation with "such discreet and grave persons as they think meet." The Act ordered that no one should pay more nor less than the wages so settled. In practice this amounted to the justices giving authoritative sanction to a rate of wages according to the industrial forces at work in a particular locality, and after consultation with the officials of the various Craft Companies. The following extract from one of the old magisterial books which are in the Salisbury Muniment Room, shows an order made by the local justices under this Act:—

"The Rates of Wages appointed according to the statute, and agreed on at the said sessions: first that all carpenters, freemasons, tylers, helyers, and playsterers, the ov'r or chieffe workmen to take fflowerteen pence by the daye and noe more. The journeymen to take twelve pence by the daye and noe more. The apprentices who have served four years of their apprenticeship to take tenpence by the daye and noe more. The laborers to take tenpence by the daye and noe more. Signed, Anthony Brickett, Mayor; Mathew Bee, Henry Pearsone, Robert Banes—Thomas Squibb.” In 1598 the citizens petitioned Bishop Cotton, asking him to secure for them the Royal incorporation of the various Trade and Craft Companies, in order to prevent the evils arising from the influx of strangers and foreigners, and so to protect the workmen of Salisbury against the competition of strangers who came to the City to trade without in any way assisting the finances of the Corporation. Two years later petitions were sent both by the Corporation and several of the Craft Companies to the Privy Council complaining of the same hardship, and in the year 1609 a deputation, consisting of the Mayor and several of his colleagues of the 24, was sent to London, to endeavour to procure a new Charter, which, amongst other things, would give the Corporation greater power to regulate and control the trade and the Craft Companies of the City. The interesting old magisterial book in the Muniment Room, which has been alluded to before, contains the names of several hundred citizens who gave voluntary contributions towards the cost of obtaining this Charter, and shows the various trades of the donors and the amount of their subscription. The merchants, whose names come first, include mercers, grocers, apothecaries, goldsmiths, linen drapers, upholsterers and embroiderers, and they gave, individually, amounts ranging from 60s. down to 20s. each. The brewers and maltsters, who follow, gave from £5 to £2 each. The bakers gave smaller amounts, ranging from 13s. 4d. to

5s. each, whilst the tanners contributed 40s. to 10s. each, the shoemakers, curriers and cobbler from 20s. to 5s. each. The clothworkers and shearmen and the parchment makers and glovers subscribed small sums, and the haberdashers, woollen drapers and butchers rather larger amounts. The armourers, cutlers, smiths and ironmongers gave from 15s. to 2s. 6d. each, and the fishmongers came down handsomely with sums varying from £5 to £1 each. The following trades are represented by subscriptions of from 5s. to 2s. per man:—Saddlers, carpenters, joiners, cooper, cooks, barbers, masons, tylers, plasterers, chandlers, dyers, wire-drawers, flax-dressers, card-makers, collar-makers, roopers, plumbers, and pinnemakers. The innholders contributed 20s. to 1s. each and the picture-drawers, four in number only, gave 10s. each.

At length, in the year 1612, the Salisbury Corporation obtained their long-desired Charter of Incorporation from James I., and the success of their efforts was largely due to the exertions of their legal adviser, Giles Tooker, a barrister of Lincoln's Inn, who was at the time one of the representatives of the City in Parliament. Giles Tooker became, under this Charter, the first Recorder of the City of New Sarum. The Corporation had the good fortune also, at this juncture, to have a powerful friend at Court in the person of Robert Cecil, the first Earl of Salisbury, who was Lord High Treasurer, and whose influence was brought to bear in favour of the City, to which he was no stranger. The following short extract from this Charter shows the powers which were granted by it to the Corporation to enable them to control not only the Craft Companies, but also the trades of the City generally:—

"Whereas merchants, artificers and others, inhabitants of other cities, for their private gain, sell their merchandise in the City and stay as long as it is pleasing to them without any payment or taxation towards the maintenance of the City, by which means the City is now reduced to ruin, decay and poverty, We graciously commiserating and desiring further to amend the state of the said City, Will of our especial grace grant unto the Mayor and Commonalty of the said City in their Common Council power to make under the Common Seal Free Citizens, and that no merchant, artificer, vintner, innkeeper, brewer, maltster, or other using or exercising any art, occupation, or mystery or any other person whomsoever who shall not be a Free Citizen of the City aforesaid, shall use or exercise any art, occupation, or mystery within the City or in any house, shop, place, or stall in the City, or in the cloisters of the said City, or in the suburbs and precincts of the same, for the selling any goods or merchandise there unless in the time of fairs and markets within the City of New Sarum under pain of forfeiture to us and under pain of Fine and imprisonment of their bodies for contempt and disobedience."

The Charter also gave to the Corporation power and authority to determine the statutes, articles, and ordinances of the Craft Companies, but provision was made in the Charter to exclude from any regulations which the Corporation might make all those artificers who were employed, or should at any time be engaged, in repairing and maintaining the fabric of the Cathedral and the houses of the Bishop, Canons and others residing in the Close. Shortly after the Charter was received the Corporation made an order as follows:—"Sep., 1612. Ordered that every Citizen and Freeman of this City using any trade, or mystery, or occupation shall, before the feast of the birth of our Lord God next coming, get himself to be in some Company, upon the pain of forty shillings." Another order was made that no one should be made a Freeman without the knowledge of the Wardens of the Company to which he wished to belong, and that no apprentice was to be made free unless he was admitted to one of the Companies of the City, and then as such presented by the Wardens to the Common Council. The Corporation also prepared and adopted a table of fees, to be taken by the Mayor and by their officials, in connection with their approval of the orders of the various Guilds as reconstituted. The Mayor was to receive for signing the orders of each Company 6s. 8d., for enrolling each apprentice 12d., for signing each writing of enfranchisement 12d., for the acknowledgment of every deed 2s., and for signing additional orders to each Company 12d. The Recorder was to have yearly for his certain fee £10 from the Chamber, and for other matters the same fees as the Mayor. The Town Clerk was to receive for entering the orders of any Company 8d. the sheet, for enrolling indentures of apprenticeship 12d., for entering every letter of freedom 12d., and for enrolling every deed 4d. the sheet. The Principal Sergeant-at-Mace for sealing the orders of each Company was to be paid 3s. 4d., and the residue of the Sergeants and officers 3s. 4d.; for the seal of every letter of freedom the Principal Sergeant-at-Mace was to receive 6d., and the residue of the Sergeants and officers 6d.; for sealing each lease the Principal Sergeant-at-Mace was to be paid 12d., and also for sealing additional orders 12d., whilst the rest of the officers were to have 2s.

The Trade Companies received their new orders and constitutions during the years 1612 and 1613, and copies of these documents are in the Muniment Room. The orders of the Smiths' Company were ratified by the seal of the Mayor on March 6th, 1612. This Company included armourers, cutlers, pewterers, brasiers, bell-founders, ironmongers, watchmakers, wire-drawers, card-makers, saddlers, and "pinnemakers." The next Company to receive their orders was the Shoemakers'. The document is dated March 8th, 1612, and under this Company are included shoemakers, curriers and last-makers. The Merchants' Company now appeared as the Grocers' Company, and their orders were signed on March 16th, 1612. The Company included grocers, mercers, apothecaries, goldsmiths, linen drapers, milliners, vintners, upholsterers, and embroiderers. The next orders to be sanctioned were those of the Glovers' Company on March 20th, 1613, this Company including glovers, parchment-makers, collar-makers, and search-makers. These were followed by the Bakers, the Clothworkers, the Barbers-chirurgeons and Silk Weavers, the Butchers, and finally by the Company of Joiners, whose orders were signed on 10th September, 1613. The members of each Company were required to assist in protecting the City against fire, and an order was made by the Corporation:—

"That every one of the xxiv (aldermen) of this Company shall provide two leather buckets, and each of the xlviii (councillors) one bucket, and every Craft Company, or Society, four buckets, and the Company of Merchants six buckets; crooks and ladders to be provided at the expense of the Chamber." In the following year a further order was made:—"That the buckets of the Companies be placed in the parish church, to which the said Companies shall resort."

CHAPTER VIII.

THE WEAVERS.

The Weavers’ Guild was the most ancient of the Salisbury Craft Guilds. Several authorities state that the weavers were incorporated by Royal Charter in the time of Henry VI., but there does not appear to be any evidence in support of this opinion.

In the chapter on “The Merchant Guild” attention was drawn to the large number of merchants in Salisbury during the early part of the fifteenth century who were dealers in wool for export. Apparently it was about this time that the earliest of the Craft Guilds in Salisbury was started. One authority says:—“The Tellarii called lynnen-wevers were the oldest craft in Salisbury, probably about 1398.” The late Mr. Swayne says:—“In the very early days of the City, I imagine there was only one Craft Guild, ‘The Gilda Textorum,’ to which all who had anything to do with cloth-making belonged, and I have found no evidence of any other before the year 1400.” After this date the industry of cloth-making was largely extended in the City, and in 1412, when the citizens were involved in a dispute with the burgesses of Southampton relative to the customs imposed at that port, and the Corporations of Salisbury and Winchester decided to prosecute the matter in the King’s Court, the Salisbury Weavers’ Guild advanced one hundred shillings and the Fullers forty shillings towards the costs.
The art of weaving was England's oldest industry. The craft was subject to many subdivisions, into which all trades in the Middle Ages were split up. There were weavers of woollen cloth for tapestry, weavers of woollen cloth for drapery, &c. Weavers, woolmen, fullers, shiermen, burrelers, and cloth-workers were all connected with the cloth-making industry, but each had their own distinct craft. Edward III. brought great prosperity to these workers by prohibiting the export of English wool, and restricting the importation of foreign woollen goods. Previous to this, the rich fleeces of our English sheep had been mainly sent over to the Netherlands, where the Flemish weavers of Bruges and Ghent wove them into cloth for the English market. At the same time the King invited foreign weavers to our shores, and as an inducement offered to grant them franchises. English wool was not allowed to leave the country. Foreign woollen goods were not to be brought in, and Englishmen were encouraged to weave their own cloth, assisted by the foreign craftsmen, who brought with them the secrets of their skill. In a few years the number of those who were engaged in cloth-making had largely increased, especially in the larger towns and cities. Salisbury was at that time one of the most important markets for wool in the South of England, and it became also a celebrated mart for white and motley cloths, maintaining its reputation for 250 years. The City must have been at this time an ideal spot for weavers, fullers, and others who were employed in the making of cloth, situated as it was at the confluence of several rivers, and having in its streets large open channels, which were constructed to convey through the City a good supply of fresh water, which was one of the requisites of the cloth-making industry. The City, being so adjacent to the Plain, with its large flocks of sheep, also gave it additional advantages, the wool being gathered, cleaned and sorted near the homes of the workers. We are told that there was scarcely a cottage in the City that had not its spinning wheel. The spinning was done by the women and children, not always as a regular employment, but in their spare time after the ordinary house duties were completed. When spun, the wool was distributed to the weavers, and then carried to the fullers, whose mills and racks were erected by the sides of the streams. The City Chamberlain’s accounts for the years 1400 to 1450 contain many entries which show that a number of the tenants of Corporation property were weavers and fullers, e.g.—

“14/- for a cottage occupied by Alice Couper, which with a garden, rack and cottages, Johana the relic of William Warwik lately gave to the Mayor and commonalty.”

“16/- for a garden with a fuller’s rack in the same, situated in Endelestrete near the trench (fossat) of the city, and let to John Golde, fuller, by lease for 50 years, he repairing the same, this the first year.” In the same year John Mildenhale, of New Sarum, confirms in fee to Walter Nandre all the cottages and racks adjoining in “Castelstret beyond ye barr’s.”

It may be of interest to give a quotation from Cassell’s Social England, to show the number of workers required at this time to convert a pack of wool into cloth:—“To make a pack of wool (240 lbs.) into stuffs, serges and callimancoes, would employ for one week 302 persons, namely, 7 combers, 250 spinners, 20 throwers and doublers and 25 weavers. That is, 10 spinners were required to keep up with one weaver. The rate of wages for spinning was low; it was a bye industry largely practised by women in the evenings, after the day's ordinary work was done." Men are mentioned at this date as webbers (weavers), fullers, and dyers; and women as websters, carders and spinners. When the cloth had passed through the fuller's hands, it came into the merchant's possession. The merchant supplied the local craftsmen (tailors), and also despatched his cloth by pack-horses to the various fairs and market towns in the South of England. Hatcher, in his History of Salisbury, gives an extract from the Corporation Ledger A, which shows not only the rapid increase of the cloth-making industry in the City during the years 1398 to 1420, but also gives us some idea of the large number of weavers and fullers who were employed in Salisbury at this time. The extract in the ledger gives an account of a meeting of the Corporation, which was held on February 10th, 1420, at which there were present, in addition to the members of the Council, "81 master weavers, 207 journey-men weavers, and 4 stewards of the Weavers' Guild; also 2 stewards of the Fullers', 61 master fullers, 31 journeymen fullers, and 2 stewards of the latter." Apparently the Corporation required money for the public chest, and wished to impose a duty of some kind upon all cloth exported from the City, and at the same time, by new regulations, to improve the fabric of the cloth both in material and workmanship. One of the regulations ordered at this meeting was as follows: "That no citizen or workman, nor any other not of the art, shall make any cloth or stripe cloth or motley cloth, nor any part thereof, to carry to any fair or market, nor to any place out of the city to be sold, except at the fair of St. Edward, under a penalty of the forfeiture of the cloth and a fine of twenty pounds.” Apparently this meant “except by permission of and by licence of the Mayor and his brethren,” as after this date constant entries show applications made by merchants for licences to despatch cloth out of the City, e.g., in 1421 William Pridy on his oath asserted that at the Feast of St. Calixtus, he had sold to John Draper, of Shrovesbury, six doss of white cloth, striped, and he requested a licence to take them out of the City and deliver them. In a similar manner John Gage was given a licence to take out of the City and deliver to his customer 22 cloths sold by him. William Shipman also received permission relative to half a cloth before sold, and also three yards of cloth sold by him to Richard Harwell, Canon of Wells. At about the same time John Corscombe was accused before the justices by John Noble, the Deputy Ulnater for Salisbury, of having in his possession 21 striped cloths, which were sealed with a counterfeit seal both of the King and the City. To prevent fraud of this kind, an order was made by the Council that the Deputy Ulnater should visit all the houses of clothworkers for the purpose of sealing the cloth.

The Ulnater or “Aulnager” was the official appointed to keep the seal, under a statute that was made in 1465 to ascertain the length and breadth of cloths, all of which were to be sealed with lead seals. Apparently the Weavers’ Guild were obliged to make a return of the names of all their craft, with the several marks belonging to each man by which the quality of every man’s cloth might be known; the weaver would affix his mark upon each piece of cloth he made before submitting it to the Ulnater or his deputy, and this official, after he had measured the material and had found it of the length and breadth according to the ordinances, would seal the cloth with the official seal or token. It may be explained that the term Aulnager is derived from the old French "Aulne" = ell, signifying the measurement and official inspection of cloth.

The Chamberlain's accounts for the year November 2nd, 1484, to November 2nd, 1485 (William Bokett, Mayor), contain an interesting item among the disbursements, which shows that cloth, both red and green, was bought by the Corporation for making the uniforms of 63 armed men, which the City supplied towards the forces for the assistance of Henry of Richmond (Henry VII.) against King Richard III.

"To Richard Hawkins for a woollen cloth (pannolani) of red color, and another of green, bought of him for making thereof 'lez Jackettis,' for the livery of 63 Soldiers for the City of Newe Sarum against Richard III. late King of England; in addition to the 60 shillings received from the Mayor and other citizens, and the 9/6 received of Richard Mundy; price per yard 12d. Sum total 13/4."

It will be noticed that the cloth cost £4 2s. 10d. This at 12d. per yard would be about 83 yards; 12d. per yard would be about equal to 20s. per yard of our money.

One of Richmond's Standards at Bosworth was a red dragon upon white and green sarcenet. Perhaps the dress of the Salisbury contingent was red and green accordingly.
The City of Salisbury was so closely connected with some of the most stirring national events at this period that it may be of interest to briefly refer to them.

After the death of Edward IV. in the early part of 1483, his brother, Richard Duke of Gloucester, seized the throne, and in August of the same year his two little nephews, Edward and Richard, sons of Edward IV., were murdered in the Tower. Within two months of their deaths a rebellion had broken out, which was headed by the Duke of Buckingham, the most powerful subject of the King, and a brother-in-law both of the late King and to Lionel Woodville, the Bishop of Salisbury. Buckingham, who had previously been Gloucester’s chief confederate, gathered a large number of Welsh retainers at Brecknock, and risings had taken place at Salisbury under John Cheney, who was the Bishop’s bailiff of the City; at Exeter under the Marquis of Dorset, and also at Newbury and Maidstone. King Richard offered a reward of £1000 or the capture of “his greate Rebell and Traytour the late Duc of Buckyngham” and for the Bishops of Salisbury and Ely, and the Marquis of Dorset 1000 marks.

Richard marched with his forces to Salisbury as a central position to prevent the junction of the different bodies of rebels. These were dispersed with ease, as no aid came from Buckingham, who had advanced as far as the Forest of Dean, but could get no further. Owing to severe storms and the rising of the Severn, he was prevented carrying out his plans, and took refuge in Shropshire with a retainer, who betrayed him to the Sheriff of the county, and he was sent a prisoner to Salisbury. On the day after his arrival in the City, viz., on 2nd November, 1483, William Bokett was elected Mayor, and in the absence of the Bishop, and also of the Bailiff and the Deputy Bailiff, both of whom had joined in the Salisbury rising, and were subsequently attainted, the Mayor was sworn in before the King. The entry in the ledger commences as follows:—“Ciuitas Sarum. Electio Maioris civitatis predicte facta in commemoracione animarum anno regni Regis Ricardi tercii post conquestum Anglie primo. Willielmus Bokette Maior. Juratus Coram Domino Rege.”

On the same day Buckingham was tried for high treason, or, as one authority says, “without arraignment or judgment, he was in the open Market Place, on a new scaffold, beheaded and put to death.” The late Mr. H. J. F. Swayne, who devoted much study to this subject, says:—“My own belief is that the Duke was beheaded on Bishopsdown, where the gallows of the Bishop formerly was; possibly where the ‘Weeping Cross Tree’ now stands, at the cross roads, which certainly marks the site of a cross which was in connection with the gallows, if it was not on the place itself.”

The Bishop of Salisbury, Lionel Woodville, who was attainted and forfeited all his property, is said to have joined Richmond in Brittany, and to have died from the shock occasioned by the execution of Buckingham, who married the Bishop’s sister. Sir Richard Hoare states that there is a MS. (99) belonging to the Society of Antiquaries recording that Buckingham was buried in the Church of the Grey Friars at Salisbury; “Also Henry his son duke of Bockyng-ham w’ch died at Salysbery and there is beried in the gre ffieres the yere of our Lord MCCCC and LXXX and iiij.’’

Tradition says that at the time of the suppression of the monasteries, when the site, buildings, and property of the Grey Friars were granted to John Wroth, the remains of the Duke of Buckingham were removed to Britford Church.

It may be of interest to state that the house and convent of the “Franciscans,” or “Grey Friars” (Friars Minor), was at the rear of some houses in St. Ann Street, the gate, or entrance to the Monastery, being in Frerenstret (the present Friary). This Monastery was founded by Richard Pude in the reign of Henry III., and according to an inventory which was made in the 34th year of Henry VIII., the establishment consisted of “The Quere, the Churche, the Stepill, the Vestre, the Freyter, the Palar, the Halle,” and the domestic offices.

The earliest reference to the Grey Friars in the City Muniments is a document which is dated March 29th, 1326. This is a grant made by John Chaundeler, senior, to Edmund Enefelde, clerk, and Edith, his wife, of three shops jointly situated in New Sarum, in Frerenstret, opposite the gates of the Friars Minor, and between the shops late of William Randolf, and now of John Ayshleygh, on the south, and the ditch called Le trench on the north. There are also in the Muniment Room copies of a number of wills made from 1330 to 1490, in which the testator or testatrix leaves money or goods both to the Friars Minor and also to the Friars Preachers of Fisherton (the Dominicans, or Black Friars)
One lady, Alesia, the wife of John Meriot, esquire, by will made on November 13th, 1406, left to each of these Orders, in addition to money, a bellemaser "to keep and drink out of, and to pray for her soul, and neither to be sold."

King Richard lodged at the King's House in the Close (now the Training College), which is said to have been built in 1475.

The conspiracy which had failed to overthrow Richard in the autumn of 1483 broke out again in 1485, and although the King knew that treason was abroad, he could not identify the traitors. But he struck cruelly at all those he could reach, and one of the men executed at this time was William Collingbourne, a freeholder in Salisbury and the Alderman of New Street Ward, who was indicted for conspiring to bring over from Brittany Henry Earl of Richmond, and for publishing seditious handbills, "yn derysion* of the Kynge and his Counsayll," one of which he fastened upon the door of St. Paul's Cathedral.

Collingbourne was the owner of considerable estate in the county of Wilts, and also a messuage in the City of New Sarum, all of which were granted by Richard to Edmund Chaderton, Treasurer of the King's Chamber.

In August, 1485, Henry of Richmond landed at Milford Haven with many of the long-exiled partisans of the House of Lancaster. Advancing into England, he received aid from the Talbots

* William Collingbourne scoffed at Richard's three favourites, Lord Lovel, Sir William Catesby, and Sir Richard Radcliffe, in the lines
  "The Catte, the Ratte, and Lovell our Dogge,
  "Rulyth all Englande under a Hogge."

  (Fabyan's Chronicles 672.)

The Hog was Richard himself, whose badge was a white boar.
of Shrewsbury and many of the leading families of the Midlands. Henry met the King at Bosworth Field, where Richard and many of his chief captains, including the Duke of Norfolk, were slain, and his army defeated. All through the Wars of the Roses there appear, to have been strong partisans of both parties in the City, but the action of the Mayor and Corporation in raising and arming this body of soldiers to help forward the cause of Henry Tudor clearly shows that his party was in the ascendent in Salisbury.

The Salisbury Weavers' Guild owned a considerable number of tenements in the City. Among the loose MSS. in the Muniment Room are many documents which refer to properties lying next to land or tenements "belonginge to ye Crafte of Wevers."

The Guild had a Chantry in St. Edmund's Church, and the Churchwardens' accounts contain a record of the offerings made by this fraternity at their Guild festivals.

Alice, wife of Thomas Hamme, who died in 1415, "desires to be buried in the Church of Seynte Edmund's, opposite the altar of the Blessed Virgin Mary, where the light of the Wevers remains."

The Salisbury and Winchester Journal for 26th July, 1784, contains the following paragraph:— "There having been some dispute about precedence between the taylors and the weavers companies in Salisbury, an inspection has been made of their respective Charters, and it appears that the taylors were incorporated by King Edward IV. in the first year of his reign, and this Charter was confirmed by Queen Mary, and afterwards by Queen Elizabeth, but the Weavers' incorporation was not until the 5th year of Queen Elizabeth.” The Weavers may have had an earlier Charter, which was lost and forgotten by the Guild in 1784. For instance, the Tailors accepted the statement that they were first incorporated in the first year of Edward IV. This date has since been given by several authorities who have written upon the subject; but, from the information which will appear later in connection with the Tailors’ Guild, it will be seen that the Tailors received two, if not three, Charters during the reign of Henry VI. The Charter granted to the Weavers by Queen Elizabeth in 1562 did not satisfy the Guild members, and 27 years after it was received they sent a petition to the Queen begging her to grant them a new Charter which would give them the power to appoint officials and trustees upon the death of the twelve members who were named and appointed in the Charter of 1562. They also asked to be given authority under the new Charter to acquire lands and tenements to the value of £40 per annum, instead of £20, which was the amount named in the Charter which they then wished to surrender. Their petition was successful, and a new Charter, which is now in the Muniment Room, was granted to them. It is dated Westminster, the 7th day of June, 1590. This document, after reciting the Charter which had been granted in 1562, goes on to say:—

“And because, of late, divers doubtful questions are agitated and have arisen of and upon the validity of our aforesaid letters patents, as well for that by the same our letters patent as they exist do not sufficiently provide for by what means the said body politic of the aforesaid Weavers can and ought to have perpetual succession after the death of the aforesaid John Eyre, John Girdler, Thomas Heath, William Bedford, John Allen, Robert Creede, Robert Harte, John Robart, John Purton, Edmund Pannell, John Taylor & William Grafton, Citizens and Weavers of the City of New Sarum, and for divers other defects discovered in the same letters patents, and by reason of our aforesaid concession for the good of our aforesaid City according to our gracious intention . . . . know ye therefore that we to their aforesaid petition on this part, animated of our special grace and certain knowledge & mere motion for our heirs and successors, will ordain, concede & establish that all & singular the Weavers of woollen-cloths & linen & other cloths whatsoever in our City of New Sarum & the suburbs & precincts of the same who now are, or henceforth or hereafter shall be, may be and shall be one body corporate and politic, in fact & name by the name of the Wardens and Community of Weavers in the City of New Sarum, in the County of Wilts, & by these presents we erect, make, ordain and create them by the name of the Wardens and Community of Weavers in the City of N.S. . . . And that by the same name they shall have perpetual succession, and shall be in future times persons proper and in law capable to hold, receive, acquire and possess lands, tenements, liberties, privileges, jurisdictions and hereditaments of whatsoever kind, nature or species for themselves and their successors in fee and perpetuity or otherwise, also to give, concede, demise and assign the same lands, tenements."

This new Charter gave the Weavers power to hold property of the annual value of £40, and also to plead and implead, respond and be respondents in courts of law, to make laws and statutes for the government of their Guild, and to enforce their observance. They were authorised to have a common seal for causes and agreements, and were given power to break or change their seal. Two Wardens were to be elected by the brethren annually; and by the Charter, Thomas Stokes and Ralph Heath were constituted and made Wardens for the first year. At this time (1590) Weavers and all others in the City who were engaged in the cloth trade were in a very prosperous condition. It has been calculated that about 2000 persons (rather more than one-fourth of the population of the City) were at this period dependent upon the cloth trade for their living. Salisbury, during the preceding 100 years, had been celebrated for its cloth, and it continued to hold its pre-eminent position for almost 200 years longer, with occasional short periods of depression in trade, when we find many of the artizan weavers in distress, e.g., on September 6th, 1630, the Corporation informed the Weavers' Company that "many poore people journeymen wevers fall on the charge of the cittie oute of the Companie of Wevers," and it was ordered that the Company should shew cause at the next meeting why they should not discharge the City of "this charge of the poore of the Companie they havinge revenue for that purpose."

In the following year an order was made "That wevers are to keep to their proper craft, and not meddle or interfere with the business of the clothiers," and the City Chamberlain was instructed to "geve warninge to suche wevers and others as doe digge chalke or earthe, or make pitts in the Greencroft or diches thereof, and to forbear the doinge thereof."

On January 21st, 1718, a petition was presented to the House of Commons from the Salisbury Corporation of Weavers, in their Common Hall assembled. The petition set forth that, by reason of the clandestine export of wools into France, the commodity had become so scarce that there was not sufficient to carry on the woollen trade of the Kingdom and to keep the many thousands in their employ, particularly two thousand, at least, in the City of Salisbury. The price of wool, the petition added, was thereby so much advanced, and the markets for cloth abroad so low, that clothiers in general would be obliged to circumscribe their trade, to the great prejudice of those employed under them. Salisbury cloth at this time was described as fine white flannel and coarse white and striped flannel. These cloths were said to have been more durable than the celebrated Welsh flannel, but not so soft. A 36-inch wide serge was also made in large quantities in the City.

The Weavers’ old hall was in Endless Street, in the premises now used as the City Police Station. The house and the adjoining property, St. Michael’s Home, were both owned by Mr. Joseph Everett, a master weaver, or clothier, who seems to have followed the good example of many of the merchants of Salisbury, who, during the preceding century, had been benefactors of the Trade Companies. It appears that in the year 1784 Mr. Joseph Everett required for his own use the house and hall, which had been so long in the occupation of the Weavers’ Guild, but he provided for them a new hall in Rollestone Street. This hall is generally supposed to have been in the house at the south-west corner of Rollestone Street and Salt lane. The house contains one very large room, at present used by Miss Harrison as a schoolroom. The following extract from the Salisbury and Winchester Journal, of June 28th, 1784, refers to the opening of this new hall:—“On Thursday last the new Weavers’ Hall in Salisbury was opened, when an elegant entertainment was given to the weavers by Mr. Joseph Everett, consisting of two gammons of bacon, two legs of veal, two legs of mutton, two bushels of peas and two large plum puddings, and as much strong beer as the company could drink by 10 o’clock at night. The occasion of this entertainment was from the weavers consenting to quit their old Hall in Endless Street, and for the future holding their meetings in the new Hall in Rollestone Street. The morning was ushered in by the ringing of the bells."

Mr. Joseph Everett was at this time a member of the Corporation, and was elected Mayor of the City in 1803. From this time the increase of trade and the growing division of labour made it impossible to regulate wages and prices, except by competition, and with few exceptions, the control formerly exercised by the Craft Companies over their trades was abandoned in practice. The struggle to maintain the old customs in face of adverse economic conditions is clearly marked by a constant stream of petitions to the civic authority. These petitions, which as a rule were dealt with by the Corporation in a sympathetic manner, complained of the export of wool, and of the masters giving employment to strangers in opposition to the interests of the freemen and members of the Company. But, in 1814, there were still three Craft Companies connected with cloth-making taking part in the procession held in Salisbury upon the occasion of the great peace rejoicings. These Companies were the Weavers, the Woolcombers, and the Tuckers (clothworkers). This is the last occasion upon which the Weavers took part in any public function. In the Reform celebration in 1832 they are missing from the list of Societies which took part in the procession upon that occasion, and the Company of Weavers probably ceased to exist about this time.

It may be of interest to state that in 1810, after Messrs. Bowles, Ogden and Wyndham, of the Salisbury and Shaftesbury Bank, were declared bankrupts, a bank was established in the old Weavers' Hall in Endless Street by Messrs. Joseph Everett, Francis Seaward, John Hodding, jun., Henry Hetley, Charles William Everett, and Richard Hetley. This Bank first traded under the name of Everett, Seward and Co., and later on as Everett and Hetley, subsequently becoming Everett and Pinckney. The fine old oak panelling which originally covered the walls of the Weavers' Hall was removed, and carefully re-fitted to adorn the large public room in the new bank premises, built by Messrs. Pinckney Brothers in the Market Square in the year 1878, and recently closed by the Wilts and Dorset Banking Company, with whom Messrs. Pinckney amalgamated some years ago.
CHAPTER IX.

THE TAILORS.

The Tailors' Guild ("Sisorum") is placed fourth on the list of the City Guilds, which was entered in the Salisbury Corporation Ledger in the year 1440. It appears to have been one of several Craft Guilds which were formed in the City a few years after the foundation of the Weavers' Guild, viz., 1400—1410. As far as can be ascertained, the seven books of the Tailors' Fraternity are the only complete records remaining in Salisbury of any of the ancient Guilds of the City, and judging from these records, the "Tayllours'" must have been one of the most interesting, and probably also the most wealthy of the many Craft Fraternities which existed in the mediaeval City of Salisbury. It has been repeatedly stated that the Tailors' Guild was founded by William Swayne during his mayoralty in 1461, but the books of the Fraternity show that it had been in existence for some years before that time. The City Corporation Ledger shows that the Guild was in existence at an even earlier date than 1444, which was the year in which the first of the regulations that are recorded in the books of the Guild were made. Unlicensed from its foundation until the year 1447, the "Tayllours'" Guild was a voluntary association formed to regulate and control the craft and the men and women who were engaged in the occupation or mystery of tailors.
INITIAL LETTER OF QUEEN MARY'S CHARTER TO THE TAILORS.
The "Burgh Register," to which reference will be made, shows that the Fraternity of Tailors obtained a Charter in 1447, which gave them licence to found a Guild Chantry in St. Edmund's Church, and that these letters patent were revoked and cancelled upon the petition of the members of the Guild, and also that in 1449 a fresh Charter was granted by Henry VI., which gave the Fraternity licence to found their Guild Chapel in St. Thomas' Church. The petition alluded to prayed for the revocation of the first-named Charter, and says that the petitioners wished in St. Thomas' Church to do all things which "ought to be done, as it was wont, and had been accustomed to be done from ancient times." In 1451, at a convocation of the members held in the Church of the Grey Friars,* it was decided to have a Master of the Guild, in addition to the ordinary officials, such as the wardens, stewards, chamberlain, &c., and John Assheford, who was a member, and whose name appears a few years later on the Bede-roll of the Guild as one of their earliest benefactors, was chosen as the first Master of the Craft. Interesting references will also be made to the "Chapell of Seynte Kat'ren in Seynte Edmonds," and to St. John's Church on Harnham Bridge. John Pynnoks was the earliest of the benefactors of the Tailors' Guild, and his name appears first on the Bede-roll in 1444. The Pynnoks were an important Salisbury family, and in 1295, when the City for the first time sent representatives to Parliament, one of the two citizens who were chosen as M.P.'s for the City upon that occasion was a Richard Pynnoks. The family owned a considerable amount of property in the City, and were connected with the celebrated "Pynnokes Inn," which, together with the Old George Inn, came into the possession of the City Corporation in the 15th century. There are several documents in the Muniment Room relating to the Pynnoks family, amongst these being an indenture, dated August 16th, 1374, by which Elena Pynnoks, daughter and heir of Simon de Oxenford, late citizen of New Sarum, granted and confirmed to John Pynnok, her son, all the lands, tenements, rents, and reversions in the said City, which descended to her, by hereditary right, at the death of her said father. She also granted to the said John her tenement called "Pynnokes Inn," and also "a fullers mill and all the lands, meadows, &c., in the vill and fields at Westharnham, the said John rendering to her during her life six pounds of silver, in equal quarterly portions." There is another indenture, which is dated March 26th, 1385, by which John Pynnok grants to William Fuystour and Edith, his wife, "the Pynnokes Inn," in Ministrestret and the shops and chambers adjoining on either side. The red wax seal which is affixed to this document is a Chevron, between three horses' heads, on a shield, within a trefoil, with a legend, "Sigill, Mion, Nls. Pynnok." Except during the Mayoralty of William Swayne in 1479, when several meetings of the Tailors' Guild were held under his presidency at the Council House, the regular assemblies of the Fraternity, from 1451 until 1524, were held at the Grey Friars. In the latter year the Tailors' Hall was built, after which all assemblies and feasts of the Guild were held in their own building.

From the extracts from the ledgers of the Guild, it will be noticed that the third regulation ordained that a Mass, or "Mynde," should be held for the benefactors and members of the Guild quick and dead, on St. John's Day in May, in St. Thomas' Church, and also on St. John's Day at Midsummer in St. Thomas Church. The brethren were also ordered to be present at a "Mynde," held in St. Thomas' Church on St. John's Day in Harvest upon pain of forfeiting two pounds of wax. St. John's Day in Harvest must be the feast of the beheading of St. John the Baptist, August 29th. St. John's Day at Midsummer, the Nativity of St. John the Baptist; and St. John's Day in May, the feast of St. John the Evangelist, Ante Portam Latinam, May 6th.*

The rules and constitutions of the Guild, which were adopted in 1444, ordained that, after the great annual feast on Midsummer Day, the Masters and the journeymen, accompanied by their priest and the minstrels, were to go in procession bearing the light of the journeymen to St. John's Church, Harnham Bridge (Seynte Johnnys hows at Aylewater brigge), and from thence to the Cathedral. After service in the Mother Church, the members were to return in procession through the High Street and over the pavement in the Market to the Hall of the

* (St. John Ante Port. Lat., or, St. John the Evangelist before the Latin gate). In the persecution of the Christians, under Domitian, this evangelist was accused of attempting to subvert the religion of the Roman Empire; and being sent to Rome, was there, before the gate called Porta Latina, cast into a cauldron of burning oil, in presence of the Senate. From this cauldron he not only escaped injury, but as the legend tells us, came forth in renovated health and vigour. He was then banished to Patmos. The evidences of St. John's miraculous preservation from martyrdom being considered doubtful, our Reformers discontinued the observance of this day, merely retaining the festival of that Evangelist on the 27th of December.
Masters, and there to have "a drynkyng yn the moste godely wyse." This Hall may have been the chamber in St. Thomas' Cemetery, which, according to the accounts of the Churchwardens of St. Thomas, was let by them to the Masters of the Tailors' Guild at a rental of vis. viid. per year. Such a chamber would probably be a room of moderate size, and quite suitable as a meeting place for the Masters of the Guild, but not large enough to accommodate all the brethren of the Fraternity, who were obliged, under a penalty, to attend the half-yearly meetings of the Guild, which, as before stated, were held in the hall of the Grey Friars. The first book of this ancient Guild contains no information concerning the two Charters which were granted to the Tailors during the reign of Henry VI., but some interesting particulars respecting these Charters, taken from the Register of the Dean and Chapter, have been supplied by the Registrar of the Diocese and Chapter Clerk (Mr. A. R. Malden).

The Burgh Register, fo. xxii., p. 45, contains an entry dated June 25th, 1449, of a new Charter granted to the Tailors by Henry VI., and revoking the one granted in 1447, which gave them permission to found, in the Chapel of St. John the Baptist in the Church of St. Edmund, a Guild or Fraternity consisting of men and women, with the usual privileges of a trade Guild, including the power to hold lands up to the annual value of £20 in mortmain. The new Charter, which was asked for and granted, revoked the former one and gave power to found a new Guild, on the same terms as before, in the Chapel of St. John the Baptist in the parish Church of St. Thomas the Martyr. In the margin there appears a list of names (presumably the members of the Guild), and a note which says that they unanimously, after long discussion, affirmed "that all things touching the said letters patent ought to be done as it was granted to them, in the Church of St. Thomas the Martyr, and as it was wont and had been accustomed to be done from ancient times."

Reference has been made to a meeting of the Fraternity which was held at the Grey Friars in 1451. The report of this assembly is the last entry which appears in the old book, which, for the purpose of reference, may be called No. 1 Ledger, until the ninth year of Henry VIII., and there are no records of the Guild for the ten years between 1451 and the first year of Edward IV. In the latter year a new book, which, for purpose of reference, may be called No. 2, or Swayne's Ledger, was provided, and, when this second book was filled, as it was in 1518, the No. 1 Ledger was again brought into use. Although the books give us no information respecting this interval (1451—1461), subsequent entries in Swayne's Ledger show that during this period the Guild had considerable difficulty in maintaining their altar, notwithstanding the yearly payment of xii. pence which every member of the Guild was obliged to contribute towards the Priest's salary, and also the assistance which the Fraternity had received from the early benefactors whose names appear in the Bede-roll.

In 1445, when the first regulations of the Guild were made, William Swayne was Mayor of the City, and in subsequent years, when he again held the office of Mayor, he presided at meetings of the Fraternity, which were held in the Council House. It would be interesting to know why the Tailors wished to transfer their altar from St. Thomas' Church to St. Edmund's Church in 1447, and also why, having in that year obtained a Charter which gave them power to found their chapel at St. Edmund's, they should have, within one year, petitioned for its revocation and begged for a fresh Charter, which would enable them to found their Guild in St. Thomas' Church. An old deed, which is dated 1448, and which will be referred to later on in connection with Swayne's Chantry, appears to give an answer to this question. This document shows that St. Thomas' Church must have been in a ruinous condition, and that the chancel and one of the chancel aisles, or chapels, had fallen down in 1447, and also that on June 4th, 1448, an agreement was signed between the Dean and Chapter and certain parishioners of St. Thomas' including William Swayne, to rebuild the Church. This agreement probably induced the wealthy merchant in question to decide not only to take his part in rebuilding the chancel, but also to build, at his own cost, a chapel of St. John the Baptist, in which he could found and endow a chantry for the Guild, and also a chantry for himself. There is nothing to show that the work of providing the chapel at St. Thomas' Church made any progress during the ten years' interval before alluded to, but it must be remembered that this was a time of great trouble and disturbance. The Duke of York, whose name appears in the Bede-roll of the Guild, and who, as heir to the Throne after the feeble young King Henry VI. had, in 1453, been appointed by Parliament Protector of the Kingdom during the King's attack of madness, was dismissed by the King in 1455 upon his recovery from insanity, and from 1455, when the battle of St. Albans was fought, until 1460, when the Duke of York was killed at the battle of Wakefield, the Wars of the Roses caused much trouble, affliction and dissension in Salisbury, as elsewhere. The City was repeatedly called upon to provide men and money for both parties, and it is not until December, 1461—that is a few months after Edward, the son and heir of the Duke of York, before alluded to, had been proclaimed King, as Edward IV.—that we find any further records of the Guild.

A few months after the accession of Edward IV., the Tailors' Guild, with the assistance of William Swayne, obtained from the young King a fresh Charter, which translated is as follows:—

EDWARD, by the grace of God, King of England & France & Lord of Ireland. To all to whom the present letters shall come greeting, Know ye that we to the praise, glory and honour of Almighty God and of the most blessed mother of our Lord Jesus Christ, and of Saint John the Baptist the forerunner of our Lord himself, have granted and given license for us and our heirs, as much as in us lies, to our beloved men of the mystery of the Tailors in the City of New Sarum that that mystery & all men of the same, within the said City dwelling & hereafter to dwell, in fact & name shall be one body & one perpetual Community. We have granted also and given license for us and our heirs aforesaid, as much as in us lies, to the same men, that they, to the praise, glory and honour aforesaid that they may anew begin, undertake, make, found, ordain & establish, and for ever continue, such a fraternity or guild of themselves & other persons, as well of men as of women in the Chapel of St. John the Baptist, within the parish church of St. Thomas the Martyr, in the City aforesaid, and those persons and others whosoever adhering to the brothers & sisters of the fraternity or guild aforesaid they may receive, admit & accept. That is the men of the mystery aforesaid in every year shall elect, make, nominate, ordain and successively constitute from themselves two Wardens, to superintend the ruling & governing the mystery, community and fraternity or guild aforesaid, also all and singular the goods, chattells & possessions of the same for ever; and the Wardens themselves & both of them when their work shall have been accomplished, and it is expedient to remove and discharge them, and others, or in the place of others and in the name of themselves or of him so removed or discharged (shall) from his office of Warden, in this manner from time to time as it shall please them elect, place & constitute. And that the same Wardens & Community aforesaid shall have perpetual succession & a common seal for the affairs of the said Community & fraternity or guild to serve for ever, And that the aforesaid Wardens & Community and the brothers and sisters of the fraternity or guild aforesaid & their successors whomsoever, as well men as women in the brothers and sisters of the fraternity or of that guild aforesaid from year to year & from time to time when for the convenience & honour of the fraternity or guild it shall be expedient, shall be able to receive, admit & accept. And in like manner as soon as the aforesaid fraternity or guild shall have been begun, undertaken, made, founded, ordained & established, that then the said Wardens & Community and the brothers and sisters of the same fraternity or guild & their successors the Wardens & Community of the mystery of the Taylors and the brothers & sisters of the fraternity or guild of St. John the Baptist of New Sarum those so appointed, by the name of Wardens and Community of the mystery (Cissorum) and of the brothers and sisters of the fraternity or guild of St. John the Baptist of New Sarum, by themselves shall be able and capable in law to acquire & receive in fee & perpetuity, lands, tenements, rents & other possessions whatsoever to hold for themselves and their successors for ever. AND ALSO that the same Wardens & Community and the brothers & sisters and their successors by themselves by the same name & under the same name shall be able to plead & to be impleaded in whatsoever our Courts, rooms & places (placeis et locis), of our heirs and successors, and in the Courts, rooms & places of others whatsoever within our Kingdom of England, before whomsoever, the Judges temporal & spiritual and in all manner of actions, real, personal & mixed of every kind & nature, to prosecute & defend and in the same to answer & to be answered according to the laws and customs of our same Kingdom, and all other things to be done & receiving like as & in the same manner as our other liege subjects, fit persons within our same Kingdom may plead & be impleaded, & they shall defend, respond & be responded, exist and do & be able to do in Courts, rooms & places aforesaid according to the laws & customs aforesaid, AND that the same Wardens & Community and the brothers & sisters & their successors, legally & honestly assembled of themselves in any place agreed on, and by statute & ordinance lawful for the healthy government of the mystery and of the fraternity or guild aforesaid according to the exigency of the necessity as often as & when the work may be to do, and all men of the mystery & Community aforesaid contrary to the statute or ordinance of this manner, when so done, they may be delinquents & transgressors by distraint for their goods & chattells, and amerciaments & distraints for the same amerciaments, also imprisonments of their bodies, according to the form & effect of the ordinances & statutes aforesaid, to chastise & to punish. They may legally & with impunity, without occasion, hindrance, perturbation or molestation of our heirs or our successors, the Justices, Escheators, Sheriffs, of other Bailiffs or of servants of our heirs or of our successors whosoever. FURTHERMORE of our ample grace we have granted and given license for us, our heirs & our successors, as far as in us lies, that the fraternity or guild aforesaid having begun, undertaken, made, founded, ordained & established the aforesaid Wardens & Community & their successors may found, make & establish a perpetual Chantry of one Divine Chaplain for each day for our healthy state and of the brethren and sisters of the fraternity or guild aforesaid whilst we live & for our souls when we shall have departed from this life, also for the soul of good memory of our very dear Lord & Father Richard, late Duke of York, and the souls of our renowned progenitors formerly Kings of England, and of all the faithful departed at the altar of St. John the Baptist in the said church of saint Thomas the Martyr should be celebrated for ever, to found, make & establish & to endow with lands, tenements, rents & other possessions, whatsoever in demesne & reversion to the value of twenty pounds per annum as well from us, as many tenements in socage or Burgage as from others whomsoever by whatsoever service they are held, by whatsoever persons they are given, conceded, conferred or assigned by will, they shall be able to acquire, to have & to hold for themselves & their successors in aid of the sustentation of the aforesaid Chaplain and to the maintenance & sustentation of other works of devotion, either of piety or of charity according to the orders, limitations, disposition & wishes of the Wardens & Community & their successors in that part to be done for ever. The Statute of land & tenements in Mortmain not to be placed or in any other statute or ordinance to the contrary set forth, or in that which lands, tenements & rents so acquired from us in socage or of free burgage as permitted to be held notwithstanding. While however by inquisitions thence to be taken & in our Chancery or of our heirs by custom to be returned it may be known that it can be done without our damage or prejudice, or of our heirs or of others whomsoever. And this without fine whatever to us, our heirs or successors for the premises or any of them, or for the execution of the same, or of any of them, to be equally rendered or paid. In witness whereof we have caused these our letters to be made patents by the witness of ourself at Westminster the fourteenth day of December in the first year of our reign (1461), by writ of the privy seal & of the date aforesaid by authority of parliament.

This Charter was confirmed by Bishop Beauchamp in 1462. The parchment, which is in an excellent state of preservation, and richly illuminated in gold and colours, was presented to the City of Salisbury in 1909, together with the Confirmatory Charters of Queen Mary and Queen Elizabeth, by Mr. Stephen Hill, of Limpley Stoke, whose father was the last clerk to the Corporation of Tailors. The first-named Charter and photographs of the other two are in the Salisbury Museum; those of Queen Mary and Queen Elizabeth are in the Corporation Muniment Room, and photographs of the three documents may be seen at the Public Library, Salisbury.*

The next entry in the book is of great interest. It contains the earliest list of the names of the members of the Tailors' Fraternity in a report of a meeting that was held in the Church of the Grey Friars in 1451. Upon that occasion there were 40 members present, and one of them, John Assheforde by name, was chosen and elected as the first Master of the Guild. The entry is as follows:

SWAYNE'S LEDGER.

The second Ledger of the Tailors' Guild, or Swayne's book, already alluded to, is of a more ornate character than the oldest ledger. It appears to have been provided to start the new regime established by the Charter of Edward IV. The book is of parchment, bound in oak boards, which are covered with crimson leather and fastened by metal clasps. The first six folios of this book contain a calendar of the months of the year, with the Saints' Days enumerated, these twelve pages being nicely illuminated with XVth century work. The oath of the brotherhood appears on the next folio, and is as follows:—

"Ye shalle trew brother be unto the fraternity and guylde of Sente John Baptiste and the mystery and crafte of tailors withe yn the cite of New Sar. Ye shalle also do and full fill all man constitucions rules customes and ordinances made bi the seide Fraternity afore this tyme, and hereafter to be made for the same withe owte any contradicion or lett. Ye shalle be obedient att all tymes to the maysters and wardenys of the saide Crafte for the tyme beinge and all-weis be redi to do an performe all man' good orden'ns sett and to be sett in the occupacion uppon resonable warninge and not be absent withe-owte a lawful excuse adde. Ye shalle also come to all main assembles and festes acustomed to the seide fraternitye and guylde upon dew waring and to pay and do your duty therefore as other bretherne ther of shalle do. Also such office or offices as shalle be layd unto you by the wardenys of the whole body of the seide occupacion of tailors, as chamberlayne or stewarde of the same and that appertayneth thereunto, ye shalle for the tyme truly do and perform from tyme to tyme, without lett or contradicon thereof, but truly do it in that shall be in you. Furthermore all manner ordinances and enacts made and sett in this boke and lidger of the seide fraternitye and Gylde, in that ye may, ye shalle filfil an do without anye contradicion or lett So helpe you God an holi, and be this boke and kiss the boke."
The next three folios contain Bishop Beau-champ's confirmation of the Charter of Edward IV., and also additional ordinances of the Guild that were made as a result of this Charter. These pages are nicely written in black letter and with illuminated borders, and the initial letter has within it a representation of St. John the Baptist and a lamb. The entry is as follows:—

"Ever more to all the moder children of holy churche, this present wrytynge, seyinge, heryng or comyng to we, Wyllyam Narchy and Jeffrey Denby nowe wardenys of the crafte of the Taillors withyn the cyte of Newe Salesbury in the Countie of Wiltshyre, John Parcchi and Wyllyam Godfray nowe Stewardes of the sayd crafte, wythyn ye sayd cyte, and Herry Gyle and Robt. Rydler there of the sayd crafte nowe Chamberleyns; sendyth grettyng yn oure Lorde God euer-lastyng and wher-as hit hath plesed the Kynges good grace Kyng Edwarde the IIII. that hath by hys l’rs patent vnder his grete seile of whiche the date ys at Westmynstre the xiii. day of Decembre, the furst yere of hys regne, and by auctorite of Parlement, and by the ren’ent fader in God and Lorde Richard Beauchamp bussshop of Salesbury and by the Dene and Chapytre of the Cathedral Churche of Salesbury a foresayd confirmed to the laude glorie and honor of almighty God, and of his blessed Modir seynt Marie, and of Seynt John the Baptiste, grannted to all the Menne of the crafte of Taylours in the cite aforesayd, that now be dwellyng, and all other that hereafter yn tyme to come for euer shall dwelle, to be one body and one comynalte perpetuall. And also he hath granted to them to begynne, make, founde, ordeyn, and stable of Newe, a perpetuall fraternite or gylde of bretherne, and sosteren, of them self and other persones also, bothe men and wymmen, yn the Chapell of Seynt John the Baptiste, wyt yn the Paryssh Churche of Seynt Thomas, wyt yn the Cyte aforesayd, and that the same personnes and other whatever they be to them wyt free wylle adherent, to be bretherne and susteren of the fraternite or gylde above sayd, to reseyue, admynster and take. Also he hath granted that the same men of the Craft, eu’ry yere of themself, to chose ii wardenis for to oversee and governe the Craft Comynaltie and brotherhed or Gylde above sayd, and also all goodes, cattalls and possessions of the same, for euermore; to these make, name, ordeyn, and successiuely to stable. . . . that the same Wardenis and comyltiae haue succession euerverlastyng, and a comen scale, for the needys of the sayd Comynaltie and fraternite, to serve for everymore."

The next clause, which is a long one, gives the Guild power to hold lands and to prosecute and defend suits anywhere in the Kingdom. This is followed by another which says:—

"Also it is granted to the forsayd Wardenys and Comy'altie and to ther successors after, that the forsayd fraternite or gyld begonne, made, founded, ordeyned, and stablishe a Chaunderie everlastyng of one preste, for divine services eu'ry day, for the wholsom state of the Kynge, & the bretherne and susteren of the fraternite or Gyld above sayd, while they shall lyve, and for there soulis after they be passed oute of thyys world, and also for the soule of the noble prince Richard Duke of Yorke, and for the noble progenitors of the Kyng, Kynges of England, and for all Crysten sowles nowe ded, at the nat' of Seynt John the Baptiste yn the sayd Churche of Seynt Thomas, to syngge for euermore. To founde, make and stablissh, landes, rentes, and tenemts, and other possessiones, whatsoever they be in lordship or reversion to the valor of xx li. by the yere."

The next entry is as follows:—

"In the iv year of the reign of King Edward the IV: Md. That it is ordeyned and accorded be the maisters and all the bretherhide of Seynt John Bapteste of the cite of Newe Salesbury, that eu'ry brother occupyinge an sworn in to the seid bretherhode shall paye to the preistes salery yerely xii d., and therto they be sworn and haue put to ther scales.

Item. The next extract is taken from a report of a meeting of the members of the Guild, which was held in the Council House in 1479, upon which occasion their munificent friend William Swayne, who had provided for them their Guild Chapel, and who at this time was again Mayor of the City, presided over the assembly. At this meeting he bequeathed to the Guild at his death nine marks of quit rent yearly towards the salary of the priest of the Tailors' Chantry, and also 40s. annually for his obit, and was chosen and declared founder of the Guild and Chantry for ever:

"Be hit known to all men, that we the foresaid, nowe wardenys and stewardys by the assent and consente of all oure nowe bretherne and susterene, and cominaltie of the sayd craft, for the grete goodwille to us and to all oure sayd craft, by the worshipful and oure good Maister William Swayne Squyry, nowe Maire of Salesbury aforesayd, afore this tyme hathe shewed and done, and hereafter graciously intendyth to do, have chosen and made the xv day of August, the xviii yere of Kynge Edward the IV. at Newe Salisburi aforesaid, within the Counsel Hous of the Mayre and Comynaltie, then and there, the said William Swayne, founder of oure said fraternite or gylde, and of the Chantrye aforesaid for ever more. And also durying his life to take his avyce of all soche thyngys as we have to do, for the whych, the same William Swayne to the begynyng of thys oure foundacion, consideryng that we never here-before were able to beginne the said fundacion, for this xxx yere and more, but we have ben att oure grete coste and charge to make tariss (tariffs) for money to be leveyed amongys us, to paye oure channeri prest wagyng yerlly, yn ponusshyng and grete hurt to all oure said crafte. Graciously hath granted to us and to oure successors for ever more after his decese ix markes of quyte rent to be paid yerly for the pencion of oure said Channtrie prest. And allso that for to hold his obbite yerly he hath granted xI s. more of quyte rente, all to be levy’d and pay’d of all his londis and tenements, and he hath ordenyde as well for his own Channtrye, as for this ovre Channtrye as by his evyndence thereof made for his own Chantrye, and by his testament for this oure Chantrye more particularly appearith, in Witness whereof we the said Wardenys, by the assent and consente of all the fraternite or gylde to this oure present writynge have put to oure comen seale.

Also be hit known to all men that we the said nowe Wardenes, Stewardys, and Chamberleyns of the craft aforesayd by the avyce of oure sayd founder, the day and yere aboue sayd at Salesbury wythin the sayd Counsell hous of the Mayre and comynaltie, then and ther assembled, the hole nowe bretheryn of oure sayd craft, that ys to say, John Hormayn, Thomas Vallote, John Hakewell, William Tropper, Richd. Subden, John Agas, Peter Marvill, John Branceley, John Godfrey and thirty others, whiche all afore the sayd Mayre and founder threer gyryghtli were sworne vpon the holy Evangeliste to obbey and keep all maner statutis and ordynance that nowe be mayde and all tho that shallbe mayde hyreafter for the wele of the sayde craft.”

This is followed by various orders and regulations, which, amongst other things, provided that no member of the Guild should keep a shop without the sanction of the Wardens under a penalty of 20s., and the Wardens were not to give their sanction unless they were satisfied that the applicant was a proficient workman; that no member should work by the garment, by the week, or by the year, under a penalty of 2s. if he was a “kynges liege man,” and 3s. 4d. if he was an “aliyen.” If an alien remained longer than one quarter in the City, he was to pay 1d. per week to the common box of the Guild, and then he was called a “frefriwer wythyn ye seid cite.” (Probably “frefriwer” means free-sewer.) No member was to engage a stranger or alien as an apprentice under a penalty of 20s. No apprentice should be taken for less than seven years. No master stranger should be received into the Guild unless he paid 40s. to the common box. No member, being at variance, should take any matter in dispute before a Court of Justice without first obtaining the licence of “oure founder whylst he is alyve,” and also of the Wardens, under a penalty of 20s. The next entry is of such interest that it is given in full:—

“Also we haue ordeyned that eu’ry brother and suster of our seyd crafte of taillours, at their burrying, shall haue viii torches, and eu’ry servant that payeth to the com’on box shall haue at his burrying iv torches.

Also we haue ordeyned at eu’ry yere, yn the fest of the nativitye of Seynt John the Baptiste, a solempe obbite to be holde while the worlde standyth, first for owr founder William Swayne, and Christen his wyf, and all his children, and for his fader soule, and moder soule, and for all his friendis soulis, and for all the bretherne and susterne soulis of our said crafte, that be out of this world deceased, wythin Seynt Thomas Churche of Salesbury, in the Chaple of Seynt John the Baptiste, that is to say, on the even the Dirige by note, and yn the morrow the masse of Requiem by note, which masse to begynne whanne matins be done, at eleven at the clocke. And that our said Wardenys, Stewardis and Chamblaynes, with all our hole crafte and fraternite, and our servantis, to be attendynd uppon the Maire of the cite for the tyme beyng, and other worshipful with hym of the same; to bringe ynne the light of our seid fraternite, from the Channdeleris hous, vnto the seid Seynt Thomas Churche, vnto Seynt Johnys Chaple ther; and ther to abide at the masse, and offer at the same all our crafte, and which of our seid crafte lakke, and be not at the same masse and offering thereof, he to lose to our seid crafte one lb. of wex, without a lawful excuse y made to the Wardenys and to the Stewardis.

And that the too Stewardis for the tyme beinge, every yere shall make and sette afore Seynt John the Baptist, vpon the awter, two tapers of one lb. wex, and a garlond of roses, to be sette vpon Seynt Johns hed, and that the Chaple to be strawed with green russhis; and whanne masse is done, we all to go togyder tooure place accustomed, wher our dyner shallbe holden, withyn the seid cite, an there to abyde at dyner and fest till we haue dyned, for the which dyner eu'ry maister of oure seid crafte shall pay, for him and his wyf xii d, and for here soper, if they w'll come therto, for the same money; a man alone viii d, a woman alone vi d. And no dyner, neither feste, longer by ys to be kept, save only the same day, and that yerely to be kept while the world stondith. And soche persons of our crafte, as hath promysed our stewardis to come to dyner, and comyth not, they shall pay euerych of them vii d to the vse of the Stewardis of the seid fraternite whych must neds do the cost of that day.

Also we haue ordeyned that at the seid fest and dyner all soche our servuantis called jornemen as be wythyn our seid crafte, shall serve the Maisters of our crafte, yn the tyme of bryngyng yn of our light, and at the fest and dyner, ther abydyng with us at dyner at soche place as the Maysters and Wardens will assign, At which dyner every servuant to pay iii d. And that our seyd stewardis, whanne the Maysters ben served in at the first cours, shall purvey an honest place for all soche seruantsis to be sette at a borde or bordes conveniently wythyn the same place, and to be served by the apprentices, at the maysters assignment conveniently for ther degree. And then for the second cours of the maysters, by the seid stewardis they to be warned to arise and for to serve yn lykewyse the seid Maisters as they did the first cours, and then they to go to theire playce agen, and to be served agen of theire second cours, makyng theym as merry as they will. Also we have oderneyn that no Wardens nether stewardis bryng yn nother brother ne sufter after thes presentis, to be parteric of the praiers and suffrages of our said fraternite of Seynt John the Baptiste, and of our chantrye, but yf he pay for him and his wyf a fyne of vi s. viii d., and he that bryngyth them yn shall answer the said fyne and pay hit to our chambleynes.

Also we haue oderneyn that eu'ry yere the Monead next after the feste of the Epiphanye to these newe Wardnys, stewardis, and chambleynes for evermore, and there by the avyse of our said founder while he is alyf, that same day, the hole body of our Craft to chose and name ii newe wardenys, and yf they woll haue the one, or bothe of the said olde wardenys, or ii all newe; and as for the newe stewardis, the wolde stewardis shall name one, and the hole body shall chose another, and the said too newe stewardis shall haue and rescyve for a stock iii li., for to make our fest after the olde rule and custome, every manne to fare honestly as for the day both mete and sop—and to pay eu'ry couple of bretherne and sustere xii d. for ther dyn' and sop if they woll come, and eu'ry man alone viii d., and eu'ry wommane vi d., as hit is afore written, and that the olde stewardis ley downe the same day the iii li. that they receyved at theire comyng yn to the said wardenys; and that the same ii newe stewardis shall fynde sufficient suretie to the wardenys aforesaid for the said iii li., to pay hit agen the same xii moneth whann there be newe stewardis chosen and charged, and so fro yere to yere for evermore, at the perill of the same wardenys for the tyme beyng to answere to alle oure seid body of oure crafte, and that ii newe chambleyns to be chosen and named by the hole body of our crafte yerly for evermore, and his charge shallbe that he shall well and sufficient se the repacios of alle oure londis, and tenements, that now be and hireafter may be, and to gader up oure rentis, and all other fynes and revenues, that pertayneth or shall pertayne to oure crafte; and that they make no newe bolyng or newe reparations wythout avyse of oure said wardenys, and that at soche day every yere as they wardenys shall come to there accomptis, they shall make truly there accomptis, and none allowences after but that ought truly to be asked and allowed, and there to be sworne whan he is chosen vpon the holy Evangelist. And also they shall make yerely viii torchis, weying v score lbs and vii, and also v tapers to be browt on Mydsomer day to Seynt Thomas Churche, worshipfully, after the olde rule, and our custome, for the which makyng of torchis and tapers aforesayde, the said Chambelynes shalle receve of eu'ry brother and suster that be copied xii d., and of every jornynamane iii d., and hireof to make a rekenyng and accomptis, afore our founder, while he is alif, and Herry Swayne and John Hampton our counsellers and our auditors, while they be alif, and to them that be Counsellers after them, that hensforth the ii Chamblayns shall yerely make ther accomptis before the seyd founder duryng his lif, and before the seyd auditors and wardens the morrow next apon Seynt Nycholas day in December for evermore, all exkuse leyd apart, vpon payne of forfaytyng to the seid crafte, of every chamber- layne this dewyng."

This is the last regulation which appears in Swayne's Ledger. The next two folios contain portions of the Gospel of the four Evangelists. The extracts are written in Latin, in the following order:—"St. John's Gospel, ch. i., verses 1 to 15 (this is followed by "Blessed be the name of the Lord, from this time forth for evermore"); St. Luke's Gospel, ch. v., verses 27 to 32; St. Matthew's Gospel ch. ix., verses 10 to 13; St. Mark's Gospel, ch. xvi., verses 15 to 18; St. John's Gospel, ch. vi., verses 53 and 54. "Deo Gracias per evangelia dicta deleantur vestra delicta." (Thanks be to God! By these holy Gospels may your sins be taken away.)

Several pages of this Ledger are filled with the names of members who paid 6s. 8d. for their up-setting. The list commences in 1481; the two following are given as examples:—"Luke Sharloke ffor hys Vpsytyng vi s. viii d.";
"Receuyed in parte off paymente off John Angell ffor hys Vpsythyng iii s. iv d.; and yf yt fort en that heye be freye denyssen (free citizen) that then thys to be lawfull payemente, and otther wysse to stande as voyde and of none effekete."

The forms of the oaths to be taken by the various officials come next, and the following three are given as examples:—

There is a list of the Masters in Latin, the entry being made in the 20th year of Edward IV. (1481), as follows:—

Another entry of interest is a long list of the names of those journeymen tailors who, after having served their masters and satisfied them that they were not only proficient workmen, but also men of good character, were admitted as brethren of the Fraternity, after paying their fines. It may be explained that these fines, or fees, which journeymen were called upon to pay, were not the same amount in all cases. The fine payable by a workman who was a native of the City was 2s., but a journeyman who was an alien was called upon to pay 3s. 4d. The following memorandum appears at the top of the folio which contains the list of names:—

"Memorand: That here folwith the names of suche journeymen of Taylours as have payd ther fynes, accordyng to an article set among othyr articles of ye statutes of the Taylours crafte, in the begynnynge of this boke, in the second le’f at soche a tyme. The old Bede-roll of the Guild is written on the last folio of the No. 2, or Swayne’s, Ledger.
The first part of this roll appears to have been entered in this book in the year 1495, and this portion includes the names of 15 dead benefactors, including John Pynnok, who died in 1420, and also the names of 11 who were living at that time. It will be noticed that whilst the members of the Guild were to pray for the souls of the dead, they were also to pray for the good state and prosperity of the living benefactors. The names of 15 other benefactors were added to the list in after years, the first addition being that of William Garlyk and Margaret, his wife, in 1505, and the last that of Margery Maylen in 1581. The Bede-roll is as follows:—

"Ye shall praye for the tranquilitie & pes of all Crystyen Realmes & in speciall for the pese & tranquilitie of this Realme of England. Also ye shall p'ye for the good state & prosperite of the King Harry the VII., the Quene & the prynce & for ther progenytors. CHAPTER X.

THE CHURCH OF ST. THOMAS OF CANTERBURY, SALISBURY.

The Chapel of St. John the Baptist in St. Thomas' Church contained the Chantry of the Tailors' Guild and also that of William Swayne, and the close connection which existed for so many years between the Tailors' Guild and this Church has led the author to insert the following paper upon St. Thomas', which was read by him before the members of the Wilts Archaeological Society upon the occasion of their visit to the Church in 1908.

St. Thomas' Church was built in the early part of the thirteenth century, and there is a record of one Robert, Rector of the Chapel of St. Thomas of Canterbury, as early as 1238, in 1247 the name is given as Robert de Beavvor, and in 1358 we find John de Wilton rector of St. Thomas the Martyr. This early Church was cruciform, and comparatively a small building, consisting of a nave, with a choir formed at the east end, and north and south transepts. The choir of this ancient Church was only 40ft. 4in. in length, whereas the present choir is 59ft. long. The Church had no structural chancel, its absence being a common feature of town Churches in the Middle Ages.

the original Church as being lighted with lancet windows, similar to those of the Cathedral, and that these windows were placed in the side walls of the nave where are now the pillars and arches, the Church having no side chapels, no aisles, no clerestory, and no tower. Later authorities, including Mr. Doran Webb, who for many years has closely studied everything connected with the fabric of this Church, are of opinion that it was originally cruciform, and with a south porch, and that the south end of this porch was incorporated in the north side of the tower, when the latter was built. The earliest addition to the Church appears to have been St. Stephen’s Chapel, which stood parallel with the Church in the two bays of the then east end of the south wall. There is amongst the ancient wills in the City Muniment Room the testament of George Meriot, Esq., dated August 28th, i.e., Thursday in the feast of St. Augustine, the Doctor, A.D. 1410. He desired to be buried “in the Church of the Friars Preachers of Fisshertone Ancher, between the two pillars in the south part, viz., immediately behind the tomb of Roger Beauchamp, Knight.” His benefactions included xx s. each to the Churches of St. Thomas, St. Edmund, St. Martin, The Friars Minors, The Friars Preachers, and the Rector of St. Thomas, and also vi s. viii d. to Sir James Green, parish chaplain of St. Thomas. He bequeathed also one set of scarlet ecclesiastical vestments to the altar of St. Stephen in St. Thomas’ Church, and he directed his executors to sell certain properties, and to pay “To the fabric of the Chapel of St. Stephen on the south side of St. Thomas’ Church £10, provided it shall be faithfully begun and fully constructed anew within three years of my death."

This appears to show that St. Stephen's Chapel had stood long enough to require very extensive repairs, or rebuilding, in 1410. The next addition to the Church was Godmanstone's Chapel, which was built during the latter part of the fourteenth century; this chapel stood on the north side of the choir. In the visitation of Bishop John Waltham, in 1395, Robert Elyon and John Styll are named as holding chantries in St. Thomas' Church, and in 1404 William Burgeys was appointed to the chantry of St. Bartholomew in the same Church. The Bishop's Registry of Institutions records that in 1415 Johannes Smyth was presented to the chantry of Robert Godmanstone (St. Bartholomew's Altar).

The bell tower appears to have been commenced in 1400. The will of Thomas de Boyton, which is in the City Corporation Muniment Room, shows that he bequeathed in 1400 "XX Merkes" to the new fabric on the south side of St. Thomas'.

In 1403 the Rectory of St. Thomas was ceded by the Bishop to the Dean and Chapter. This arrangement received the sanction of the King, and was formally confirmed by Pope Boniface the Ninth in 1404. Later in the same year the Dean and Chapter granted "XII. Merkes" towards the work of the Campanile of St. Thomas' Church, the amount to be advanced from the Treasury of the Cathedral till it should be repaid from the fruits and profits of the Church. After its completion people had to pass beneath this tower through an open arch into the Church.

The next information we get respecting the Church is that in the year 1447 the chancel or a part of it, fell down, destroying in its fall one of the aisles, the latter being probably the Chapel of St. Stephen. An old deed dated 1448 (Dean and Chapter records) shows that the Dean and Chapter, who were under the rectorial obligation of seeing to the maintenance of the chancel, had decided to rebuild it upon the old lines, but the parishioners, amongst whom were the wealthy merchants, William Swayne, John Halle, Henry Swayne, and members of the Godmanstone family, were anxious to have a larger and more noble chancel than the old one, and they showed their devotion to the fabric of their Church by their eagerness to take a share in the work of increasing its size and its beauty. Consequently, on the 4th June, in the 26th year of Henry VI., an agreement was signed between the Dean and Chapter and certain parishioners duly elected for the purpose, by the commonalty of the parish, including William Swayne and John Halle, by which agreement the parishioners undertook to do all that the Dean and Chapter would not do to complete the enlarged building. The Dean and Chapter undertook to lengthen the chancel on the north side, in accordance with the work done on the south side by the parishioners (probably one additional bay). They also promised to build the pillars, arches, and clerestory on the north side to correspond with the work of the same kind done by the parishioners on the south side of the choir. The capitals of the pillars on the south side bear inscriptions, one being "The founder of this peler was art . . . . John Nichol," another has the merchant's mark of John Webb upon it. The spring of the ancient arch, which was only uncovered a few years since, is undoubtedly a portion of St. Stephen's Chapel, and this part of the Church, viz., the south chancel aisle, William Swayne undertook to rebuild and to make it 59 feet long, to correspond with the new chancel; members of the Godmanstone, Hungerford and Ludlow families promising to make the Godmanstone or north chancel aisle the same length.

We learn from the "Tropenell Cartulary" that Thomas Tropnell took to wyf Margarete daughter to William Ludlow lord of Hill Deverell, boteler to iii Kynges of England, that is to say, with Kyng Harry the iiiith, the vth, and the vith . . . which is buried in St. Thomas' Church in New Salesbury under a marble tombe at the end of the hygh Auter on the north side thereof; the ile of the which the seid William Ludlow hath late new siled and paynted, and sette with scochyn of armes of hymself, his wyf and his children (circa 1450).

The agreement is dated the "iiijthe day of the monthe of June, the yere of King Harry the VI., after the conquest of England XXVI., betwexte the Dean and Chapiter in the one part and certain parishioners duly elected by the Commonaltie of the parish on the other part." Amongst the names of those so elected are William Swayne and John Halle. The agreement says:—

"That for as moche that through misfortune but late a goe, the chancel and that other aele (aisle) of the seid chancel of Seynt Thomas Church felle downe, which moste nedes be made agen, to the grete coste of the forsaid parties, the forsaid Dean and Chapiter consideryng the said myschief, have graunted to do, make the rofe of the said Chancel after thold (the old) lengthe and brede, that is to say in the lengthe of the forsaid Chancel fourty feete and four ynches, and in brede as thold werke sheweth, and with the pelers and archhis, accordyng to the same lengthe in the northe side of the said chancel, with a clerestory above the said ailes with wyndous a cordyng to the South side of the said chancel, whiche the said pareshens (parishioners) maketh at their coste. And the said chancels Rofe made at the coste of the said Dean and Chapiter shall be covered with led, sufficientlie and in seche maner in brede, that the south wall of the said chancel after the forsaid lengthe may be coured (covered) and kepte drie. The perpetual reparacion of the which rofe after the forsaid lengthe and brede with the reparacion of the northe wall of the same Chancel, after the same lengthe above writen shall lang and perteigne to the said Dean and Chapiter and to thaire successours for ever. And the reparacion of all the remanent of all this said werke olde and newe, with all manere shettyng and clansure (shutting and cleaning) of the forsaid Chancel with the makynge of the Hye Autre and all that be-langeth thereto, shall lang and perteigne to the said pareshens and to thaire successor for ever.”

When in the years 1445—6 the affluent merchant, William Swayne, was Mayor of the City, he became the patron and friend of the Tailors’ Guild. This fraternity, from its earliest days, had an altar to St. John the Baptist in St. Thomas’ (probably in St. Stephen’s Chapel), but in 1447, that is, the year in which St. Thomas’ chancel fell down, and possibly owing to this disaster, the Guild obtained a Charter from Henry VI. which gave them licence to found their chantry in St. Edmund’s Church. In 1448, however, that is, after the agreement to rebuild St. Thomas’ had been made, the Guild petitioned the King to revoke these letters patent, and to grant them a fresh Charter, which would empower them to found their chantry of St. John the Baptist in St. Thomas’ Church. Their petition was successful, and a new Charter was granted to them in 1449. The result was that William Swayne built, at his own cost, the enlarged south chancel aisle as a Guild Chapel, and in this Chapel he founded two chantries, one an altar to the Blessed Virgin Mary as his own chantry, and the other to St. John the Baptist, for the Fraternity of Tailors. Swayne’s Chapel was completed during the episcopacy of Bishop Beauchamp, and we read that Richard Betan was admitted to the chantry of the Blessed Mary there devoutly founded on the presentation of William Swayne, merchant. The Chapel is said to have been beautifully decorated and ornamented; the east window, which was larger than it is at present, was filled with stained glass, the topmost tracery lights exhibited a representation of the Assumption of the Virgin, and the lower lights various saints, beneath canopies of enriched tabernacle work, with shields bearing the merchant marks of William Swayne, John Webb, and other patrons or masters of the Guild. The ornaments and the greater part of the stained glass and decorations of this Chapel were destroyed at the time of the visitation of the Commissioners in 1548, but the mutilated remains of this window have recently been carefully arranged and re-leaded. The walls still show considerable remains of the original mural paintings, including the three well-preserved frescoes on the spandrels of the arches, “The Annunciation,” “The Salutation,” and “The Adoration.” It has been suggested that there were originally six of these paintings, three on either side of the Chapel, and that they represented the three joyful and the three sorrowful mysteries of the Rosary; there are also a number of representations of the conventional pot of lilies which accompanies the subject of the Annunciation, and also of the badge of the Garter, the latter being used, presumably, in honour of Bishop Beauchamp who was the King’s Surveyor.
during the building of St. George's Chapel, Windsor, and who, in 1475, became chancellor of this noble order.

The beautiful Perpendicular roof of this Chapel was built above the old corbel table, which originally was seen on the exterior wall of the choir, above the roof of St. Stephen's Chapel. The transverse beams of the roof are ornamented on each side with shields bearing respectively the sacred emblems of "The Passion," the symbol of "The Trinity," the arms of Swayne, and Swayne's merchant's mark. The beams also bear inscriptions in Latin, "Pray for the soul of James the father of William Swayne," and "Pray for the souls of William Swayne and Chrystian his wife." The two painted alabaster monuments to members of the Eyre family were removed from the choir, where the old family vault stood, and the beautiful ironwork and carved woodwork were placed here to enclose a new vault for the same family in 1724. The date when the nave aisles were added is uncertain, probably 1470, but it is supposed that the work of building was continuous. It will be noticed that the line of the completed chancel aisles was continued, making the north side of the tower a part of the wall of the south aisle; but as this brought the door and the two staircase lights of the tower and the two buttresses into the Church, the architect overcame this difficulty by blocking up the door and windows and making new ones outside, and by cutting away the buttresses on the north side. The roofs of these aisles were made to match the roofs of the chapels of Swayne and Godmanstone, and the pillars and arches in the nave, which were made to agree with those previously erected in the choir, replaced the walls and early windows which had hitherto lighted the nave.

A little later, at the end of the fifteenth century the clerestory, the great west window, and the beautiful carved Tudor roof, were added to the nave. This roof is of much the same date and style as the roof of the nave in St. Cuthbert's, Wells. The corbels which carried the beams of the old roof of the nave are still in position. After the new roof was completed, the remarkable "Doom" painting over the chancel arch was executed. The two large figures in this painting, sometimes alluded to as SS. James and Thomas-a-Becket, are more generally supposed to represent St. Osmond, who was canonised in 1457, and the pilgrim who caused the painting to be placed there to commemorate his safe return from a pilgrimage. This picture was coated with whitewash in 1573; the Churchwarden's accounts for this year show that Gussett was paid 22s. for washing the Church with lime, and that Adam Marbell was paid £2 13s. 4d. "for peyntinge and Gilting of ye Queues armes, and makinge ye commaundementes at ye uper ende of ye quire."

A few years later the accounts include a payment for the Royal Arms, which are still in the Church, viz., "Roger Lovell makinge of the Quenes Armes £8 1s. 6d. and to Reynold Beckham for ye frame for the Quenes Armes, and mendinge ye pulpet £4 6s. 0d."

These arms were placed above the chancel arch, and remained there until 1880, when they were removed to their present position, and the whitewash was carefully taken off the Doom painting, when it was restored and a preparation put on the surface to preserve it. There seems little doubt but that the Church at one time presented a wealth of colour. When the south porch was cleaned in 1905, underneath several coats of whitewash, paintings too dilapidated to be preserved were found.

There was a porch on the north side of the nave, but in 1835, to save the expense of repairs, this was destroyed. There was a room above this porch. The staircase which led to this room remains, and is used at present as a means of getting on the roof of the north aisle. This room contained a fireplace, and by its side was discovered, on taking down the wall, a small niche which had been plastered over, in which were found pieces of pottery, including a crucible, supposed to have belonged to an alchymist. Mr. Doran Webb tells us that there was an anchorite who used to live in a chamber in St. Thomas' Cemetery, and he might have inhabited this room.

The rood and the rood loft were taken down in 1559, and from the accounts it appears that the organ of those days stood on the great rood loft. In 1568 the Churchwardens, Lyonel Tychborne and Giles Thorneburye, received towards “Makynge of ye newe orgaynes and as appearth by a byll £7 13s. 5d.” The following year Hugh Chapsion, organ maker, of South Molton, was paid £35 5s. 6d. for the new organ, which lasted until 1738, when it was replaced by one costing £230.

In the north window of the Godmanstone aisle there are fragments of the glass of a Late Decorated Jesse Window, and a few small fragments remain in the smaller tracery lights of the other north windows. The east window in this Chapel was a figure and canopy window, and in each of the two outer lights there still remains the head of an original canopy in white and yellow glass.

The coloured glass in this Chapel is said to be of the latter part of the reign of Edward III. Some are of opinion that this Chapel was used by the Mayor and Corporation as the Guild of St. George, and that the figure of St. George was placed over the Chapel screen in the same manner as the image of St. John the Baptist was kept in the Tailors’ Chapel, except that, in the case of the Tailors’ Chantry, the figure of their patron saint was placed on or above the altar, with a garland of roses upon the head, during the feast of St. John the Baptist.

The accounts of Richard Markes and Robert Eyre, churchwardens 1547—8, show payments to “Burges Johnson and Lytchfelde for makynge clean of the church after the departure of the vysytors xvijd., and to ij carpenters and iij laborers for takynge downe of the George ij½. viijd., for breakyng downe of the steles of the ymages in the churche xxijd., and for the repair of the places where the ymages stood ij½. viijd.”

The fine altar tomb, of Purbeck marble, stood, at one time, beneath the central arch on the north side of the choir. This is said to have been the tomb of the founder of one of the two Godmanstone Chantries, which were in this Church, but the style seems too modern for that, so possibly it is the tomb of members of the Webb family. It bore originally two inlaid brass effigies and a shield, together with the emblem of the Trinity, symbols of the four evangelists, and a marginal inscription; presumably these brasses were stripped off the tomb when the ornaments of the Church were seized and sold, and much metal from tombs, &c., was disposed of as old brass. A merchant's mark carved on two sides of the tomb alone remains to help identify the original owner. The white marble slabs which have been inserted in the top of the old tomb, and which record the names of Thomas Chafin, Esq., 1679, and Thomas Chafin Markes, Esq., 1727, lead one to suppose that when the first-named died in 1679, his grandson, Thomas Chafin Markes, appropriated this monument, and that it was used as a tomb for his grandfather and also for himself when he died in 1727, and although he had not the wit to take off the ancient merchant's mark, he left 10s. yearly for repairing the tomb for ever, "and that no other person should be buried in it."

The choir floor was raised and the seven steps from the nave to the altar were made about 1850–60, in Canon Renaud's time. Mr. Street was the architect, and it was then that the choir was emptied of its high pews and the alabaster altarpiece and screen, &c., were added.

The tomb of William Ludlow, butler to the three Kings before alluded to, stood in the church until 1813, when, unfortunately, it was removed and broken to pieces.

Under the third arch is the tomb, with the brass still intact, of "John Webbe, Mayor of the Citty," who died in 1570.

The present pulpit displaced, in 1877, an old carved wood one, which had figures of angels round it and a sounding board above it; a portion of this sounding board is in the south porch. In this porch are also placed the "Jacks"; these disabled men-at-arms being out of working order and insecure, were taken down from their perches under the clock, beside the Ting Tangs, in 1896, and placed in this porch until such time as the Churchwardens can find money to again put them in working order. According to an old manuscript book in the Free Library, "The Quarter Jackes were sette upp at St. Thomas' Church in 1582, Robert Elliott Maior." The "Ting Tangs" were cast by Wallis, Culver Street, Salisbury, in 1581, and "Thos ffeyld of Westburye for kepinge the chymes and Jackes" was paid 10s. in 1591. The Jacks are carved, in mail and open helmet, and with remarkably well-cut faces; they stood out below the clock for over three hundred years, and proclaimed the quarters and hours of the day. In one hand each of these figures originally had an iron hammer, but the hammer did not really strike the bell, although the figures used to swing round and apparently do so.

The old font, which is a plain bowl of late Norman character, was restored to the Church from a neighbouring garden in 1895. This font is supposed to have been turned out of the Church in 1647, and a small substitute provided, when the order was made that all fonts were to be taken down in Churches and placed near the minister's seat. The account of the Churchwardens for 1647 shows a payment for a board for the Parliament's declaration, 6d.; also "paid to J. Holloway for takeinge downe the fonte and laying the stones, 8s."
After the restoration, viz., on May 18th, 1661, Humphrey Beckham was paid for moving the pulpit back to its old position and for a covering for a new font, £4 15s. 5d.

On the exterior of the south wall of Swayne's Aisle can be seen remains of the ancient south porch into this Chapel, and on the buttress at the east end of Swayne's Chapel there is carved a crucifix of late fifteenth century date.

After the Reformation, Thomas-a-Becket, having been declared by Henry VIII. to be no saint, but a rebel, the Church was conveniently called the Church of St. Thomas the Apostle, and the Chapel of St. John the Baptist is referred to as the Tailors' Aisle. The Churchwardens' accounts show a payment "To T. Wait for putting a newe corbell under a summar in the Taylors Ile x s."

Another interesting relic from the Tailors' Guild Chapel survives in the form of a portion of an altar cloth, or frontal, which was discovered by the Vicar (Canon Renaud) in 1849 amongst some lumber in the store, or upper vestry. This cloth, which appears to have been made from a cope, and to date from the 15th century, was probably hidden away, and so escaped seizure or destruction upon the occasion of the visit of Edward VI.'s Commissioners to Salisbury in 1548, when the furniture and other chantry possessions of the Tailors' Guild were amongst those that were seized in Salisbury and sold to Thomas Chafyn, of Mere, by the Crown officials. This interesting relic, which is carefully preserved in St. Thomas' Vestry, is a quaint piece of needlework, and a specimen of the "broyderer's arte," which would probably have been described, in 1548, as an "olde popish painted cloath." The background is of dark brown velvet, and is embroidered on the upper part with the letters D.E.G., a bishop's pastoral staff running through the letter E., and the centre of the cloth is filled with a representation of "The Annunciation." There are two scrolls, with inscriptions in Latin. That proceeding from the angel bears the inscription, "Ave! gratia plena," whilst that proceeding from the Virgin is "Ecce! ancilla Dei." The other ornamentation is composed of angelic figures, fleurs-de-lis, and double-headed eagles, the latter, even at this early date, being the supporters of the Arms of the Mayor and his brethren. The fact that William Swayne was Mayor of the City during the year in which he founded the Guild Chantry, may account for the double-headed eagle being displayed upon this piece of needlework.* Another relic of the Guild, which is preserved in the Vestry, is a small portion of a funeral pall which was used at the funeral of members of the Fraternity.

* Mr. W. H. St. John Hope in his "Notes upon English Mediaeval Embroidery" (Society of Antiquaries, Dec. 8, 1898) says:—"Although the sacrilegious rapacity of Edward VI. and his Privy Council, during the age of robbery in the middle of the XVI. century, spared many a cope and suit of vestments, the general spoliation of Church goods, as well as the subsequent ascendancy of the Puritan faction, made no provision for the replacement of such vestments as they wore out, for there can be little doubt that in many places they continued to be worn. Copes, Chasubles, and other vestments, were accordingly converted into altar hangings, pulpit covers, hearse cloths, or other uses, and in this manner many a beautiful piece of mediaeval embroidery has been preserved to our time."

CHAPTER XI.

TEN YEARS' LITIGATION.

The Vestry at St. Thomas' Church is probably the house, or a portion of the house, which William Swayne built as a residence for his Chantry priests in 1465—7, the erection of which resulted in ten years' litigation between the Corporation and Bishop Beauchamp, and the imprisonment of the redoubtable Mayor, John Halle, for disrespectful behaviour towards the King in Council.

Mr. Duke and others were of opinion that the Vestry of St. Thomas was the Chapel of the Tailors' Guild, but it must be remembered that the Guild numbered 48 members even at this early date, and they increased so rapidly in numbers that in the second year of Henry VIII. there were 88 brethren. One of the most stringent of the regulations of the Fraternity was that upon certain feast days every member of the Guild was compelled to attend service in his Guild Chapel, or pay a very substantial fine. The wives of the members and the whole of the journeymen and apprentices were also obliged to be present upon these occasions, and, in addition, upon the great Feast Day of the Guild, viz., St. John the Baptist's Day, the Mayor and his brethren of the Corporation accompanied the Guild in their procession, and were present with them at the service which was held on this day in the Guild Chapel. Those who know St.
Thomas' Vestry house will, therefore, recognise how impossible it would have been to accommodate such a number of persons within its walls.

In 1464, after the completion of the Tailors' Guild Chapel, William Swayne obtained from Bishop Beauchamp a grant of a small piece of land for the purpose of building a house for the priests of his newly-founded Chantries. This grant appears to have led to great trouble and litigation. The piece of land in question, which was close to St. Thomas' Church, and on the north side of the newly-built or enlarged Godmanstone Chapel, was probably considered by the Bishop as waste land, and, therefore, belonged to him as lord of the City. On the other hand, the Corporation had for many years inserted this small plot in their rent roll, though, apparently, as rent in default. In 1454 the Chamberlain's account shows, amongst the rents in default, "2s. for a garden (orto) with a common latrina in the Cemetery of St. Thomas the Martyr." The City Corporation Ledger B, fol. 74, contains the following resolution which was passed at a meeting of the Council on April 5th, 1465:—

"It is agreed that, as to the toft in the Cemetery of St. Thomas the Martyr, whereof William Swayne hath lately seisen from the Bishop of Sarum, the Mayor and Commonalty intervene not touching the right and title to the said toft, this side of the quindene of Easter next after this convocation, but that after the said quindene, the Mayor and Commonalty enter in right title and possession of the said toft, and safeguard title and possession thereof until the question be determined by the law of the land. But all the goods and chattels being in the said toft, before the day of the convocation aforesaid, are to remain in arrest and in safe and sure keeping by warrant of the Mayor of the City, until the said William Swayne shall make amend for his trespass done upon the said toft."
Although the ownership of this piece of land was the subject of litigation, it appears that William Swayne went on building his Chantry-priests' house, but, unfortunately for him, John Halle—a strong and bitter opponent of Swayne—was Mayor of the City, and at the time a considerable majority of the Council followed Halle as their leader. This party behaved in a very arrogant and overbearing manner towards Swayne, and on May 25th, 1465, the officials of the Corporation were ordered to summon William Swayne to appear and explain his conduct. At the following meeting, which was held on June 14th, a vote was carried to deprive Swayne of the freedom of the City, and to expel him from the Corporation, unless he would voluntarily renounce his claim to this small piece of land. Apparently Swayne did not meet their wishes, and John Halle, eager to annoy the Bishop and to mortify his former powerful rival, Swayne, ordered the walls and chimneys of the house to be pulled down, and he imprisoned the workmen who were engaged in erecting the building. The Bishop did not brook this interference with his just rights, but at once took action against the Mayor at the General Sessions of the County. The Corporation next issued a Power of Attorney to eleven of their number, including John Halle, which gave them authority to act and treat, in the name of the Council, "concerning certain articles, causes, and matters, by them, to their most excellent Lord the King, against the Reverend Lord Richard, Bishop of Salisbury."

This document is dated August 13th, 1465. The Bishop, in answer, prepared a clear statement of his rights, and readers of Hatcher's History will find on fol. 164 copious extracts from this document, which commences, "Part of a bill unto the Kyng against one John Halle for pluckeing downe of walles builded within the Citty by the Busshop's consent." Both parties were commanded to send their representatives to Westminster, to lay the dispute before the King in Council. John Halle and several of his brethren were appointed to represent the Corporation upon this occasion, and they appeared before the King to plead the cause of the City. But John Halle's hot-headed zeal again outran his discretion, and, unfortunately for him, it occurred upon this occasion, not in the Council Chamber of his native City, but in the presence of his Sovereign and the Privy Council. His unruly language gave such offence that the King ordered him to be imprisoned, and a letter was despatched at once to the Corporation of Salisbury commanding them to choose another person as Mayor of the City. The letter, which is as follows, is dated August 22nd, 1465:

"By the Kynge.—Trusty & welbeloved, we gret ye well, latynge ye wite (know) that nowe late, John Halle youre Maire toke uppon hym in youre name & his, to opyn and shewe unto us by bille, mater of variaunce dependynge betwyxte the ryghte reverende fader in God, oure trusty and welbeloved conseillour the Busshop of Sarum, on that one partie, and you and oure cite of the same, on that other partie, atte whiche tyme, all though, the seid reverende fader, in that mater behadde hym righthe soberly, discretely, and to the peas therof right conformable, ofrynge to abyde in the same, the rule & ordinaunce of us and our Counsel. The said John of the olde rancour and malice, that he hath borne towarde the said reverende fader, as hit shulde seme contrary to hys parte and dute, brake out of the seid mater concernynge the seid cite, into his owen matiers, wherby he shewed hym self right cedicious, hasty, wilful, and of full unwitty (unwise) disposicon. In consideracon wherof, and divers other matiers us movyng, we have co'emytted the seid John Halle in to suche a place, as he shalbe kepte, and has hit apperteyneth to us to do of right, unto suche tyme as we shalbe otherwise avised. Wherfore sith (since) hit is so, that it is necessary to the seid cite to be in rule and governaunce of a maire and governor, durynge the tyme that the seid John is likly to be absent, for dyvers consideracons, and also that he is not of suche sadnesse and habilitie for many causes, as shulde serve necessarily for the good and politque guydynge of the same. We wille and desire you, that accordynge to suche privileges and liberties, as by our noble progenitors have been graunted to the predecessors of the seid reverende fader, and your predecessors, ye in all goodly haste uppon the sight of thies letters, fully applie and dispose you to procede to an ellec'con of an nother mayre of sad (steady), sobre, and discrete disposicon, in the roome and place of the seid John, the same p'sone so of newe to be chosyn to take his power and auctorite as of olde tyme hath ben used. Yeven undre oure signette, atte oure palois of Westmynstre the xxii. day of Auguste." The letter is addressed "To oure trusty and welbeloved, the citezens and co'mons, of the cite of Newe Salesburie."

The Corporation apparently were undecided how to act, or, as Hatcher says, "the spirit of the contumacious Mayor appeared still to preside over the counsels of the citizens." Nothing was done, and on September 23rd a letter was received from the King expressing "oure grete marvaile" that the Corporation had not obeyed his commands, and ordering them at once to proceed to choose another Mayor, "or els that xii. or vili. of youe atte the este appeare before us and the Lords of oure Counsaile atte oure palois of Westmynstre in the O'epites of Michelmasse next comynge, to shewe the cause why ye have not performed oure seid desire and comaundment, and to answere to suche thyngs concernynge the same as then shalbe laid and objected agenste you," &c. The Corporation appear to have been very reluctant to do as the King wished. The matter was allowed to drift until Saturday, the 10th of October, when a King's Messenger arrived in the City with a very peremptory message to the civic authority, with the result that an assembly was hurriedly called for the following day, Sunday, 11th October. William Wotton, the Deputy-Mayor, presided at this meeting, at which nine members were chosen to appear before the Privy Council. Their names appear in a most humble address which was written upon that occasion, and which constituted the answer of the Corporation to his Majesty's commands. The address, which begins as follows, “High and myghty and moste Christian Prince, oure all moste doubted liege Lord,” gives the names of the nine members who were chosen to represent the Corporation, and further informs the King that they had “yevynge thaym full power and auctorite by thes ourre writynge, sealed undre the comon seale of the seid cite, to utter and declare to youre highnesse the causes why we proceeded nat to th'elleccion of a newe Maire, to occupie in the rome and place of the seid John Halle, accordynge to yo’r seid writynge and co’aundment, and we shalle praye to God for you.” The King, evidently moved by the humility at last shown by the Corporation, sent them, a few days after, a kind and considerate reply, in which he reduced the number of those who were to represent the City from 12 or 8 to 4 or 6. Unfortunately, the Corporation again did a very foolish thing. They selected as one of their four representatives their Mayor, John Halle, who was in prison. The Letter of Attorney which they issued contained the names of John Halle, John Aport, John Hampton, and Thomas Pyrie. The three last named journeyed to London, accompanied by J. Chafyn (legal adviser) and J. Chippenham (secretary) much displeased with the Corporation for the affront offered to his person and authority by the inclusion in their authority of the name of their contumacious Mayor, declared the authority void, "As the principal person named therein, whiche ys called John Halle, is for certaine offences and rottous demeanynge, in warde, and nat atte his libertie." Another writ was at once delivered by the Privy Council to John Aport and his colleagues, who were then in London, and this writ was sent by them to the Deputy-Mayor at Salisbury, together with the following interesting letter:

"To Willm Wotton the Maior-lieutenant of Sarum and to the citezens and inhabitants in the same, Right reverent Sirs and Brethren, we commaund us unto you, assuring you, yt after our apparence before the Kyng, and the lords of his Counsaile, for as muche yt John Halle, named principal in oure auctorite, was by the Kynges high comaudement, yn warde and nat atte hys libertie, it was considered by the same, yt a newe auctorite shold be made by another privie scale, the whiche was delivered to us on Friday last past, for the spede of the whiche we heartily pray you, yt anon after the sight of the sayde privie scale, and of yis oure writinge, ye assemble the peple and procede to the execution of the seid privie seal, and the auctorite so ensealed sende to us with the same, in alle haste possible, yt we may procede ferrer in expedicon of us, and eschuyng of costes of the cite, the whiche be not small sitthe (since) oure comynge hider. A new Letter of Attorney was issued by the Council, with the name of John Halle omitted, and John Chafyn, their legal adviser, whose name appears on the letter above referred to.
designated as leader of the deputation. We get no more information respecting this deputation, but in the early part of the following year, 1466, the Deputy-Mayor, William Wotton (we may suppose Halle being still in prison) advanced twelve pounds to the City on loan, to pay the expenses to London of John Aport, in connection with the dispute. As security for this loan, the Corporation assigned to Wotton power to recover the same out of the rent of "le Georges Inne." There is no record of the liberation of John Halle, but the Council re-elected him as Mayor in October, 1465, whilst he was in prison, and we next find his name appearing on July 25th, 1466, when he presided over a meeting of the Corporation, and took the lead in making arrangements to give the King a welcome upon the occasion of a proposed visit to Salisbury, which was then contemplated. This long dispute, which, as we have seen, was commenced in 1464 in connection with the building of Swayne's Chantry house, was not settled until 1474. At an assembly which was held in Whitsun week in the latter year (B Ledger, fol. 114), the Corporation and their Mayor, William Eston, in a deed under the City Seal, made their submission to the Bishop. During the latter part of the ten years the right to the contested piece of land in St. Thomas' Churchyard formed only an insignificant detail in the dispute between the contending parties, and the question at issue became a larger one, relating to the feudal dependence of the City on the Bishop. It may be of interest to give some extracts, which are taken from the City Chamberlain's account for the year preceding the settlement of the dispute, as after this year (1473) the contested toft of land does not appear in the rent roll of the Corporation accounts. The entry on the debtor side is as follows:—"2s. for a garden and latrina at the north part of the Chantry of Robert Godmanstone, on which William Swayne has built his Chantry House (domum Cantarie)." On the credit side of the account there appears, as rents in default, "And the garden (orto) with the 'latrina' because still in litigation, between the Mayor and Commonality and William Swayne, as last year 2s." The Bishop's "Liber Niger" shows the receipt of rent of assize "for a corner tenement founded for the singers (chantry priests) near the Church of St. Thomas of Sarum." The question arises, is the present vestry of St. Thomas' really the house, or rather a portion of the house, which William Swayne built in 1465—6, as a residence for his Chantry priests, the building of which led to so much litigation and to the imprisonment of the redoubtable Mayor, John Halle? The agreement made in 1448 between the Dean and Chapter and the parishioners, shows that the choir, or chancel, was rebuilt, and that the original length of 40ft. 4in. was increased to the present length of 59ft., and that the chancel aisles—Swayne's on the south and Godmanstone's on the north—were rebuilt the same length as the enlarged chancel. The Chamberlain's account also shows that Swayne's Chantry house stood in 1473 on the north side of Godmanstone's, which is the position occupied by the present vestry. This vestry house, as is generally known, is a three-storeyed building, consisting of the upper vestry, which in past days was used as a school, the present vestry, which is on a level with the Church, and also a lower chamber, years ago known as "The Skull house," and which now contains a furnace for heating the Church. Some years ago, several old beams were removed from this under chamber, and were replaced by iron girders and fire-proof brickwork as a protection against fire, but Mr. Doran Webb, in a lecture upon "Old St. Thomas," which he gave at the Museum a few years ago, mentioned that at one time there was a singular inscription upon one of the old beams in the Skull house. In his lecture he said:—"It appeared that it (the inscription) had at first asked people to pray for the souls of William Swayne and his wife, but it was reputed that in the time of James I. some loyalist painted out the names of William Swayne and his wife, and substituted that of the King, though the painter, in leaving the word 'souls' untouched, was evidently regardless of the fact that even a monarch had no more than one soul."

The ceiling of the vestry room is original work, but the sides were in 1733 new wainscoted 8ft. high, and the partition on the east side was added so as to form a small inner chamber. The minutes of the vestry show that at that time there was a step or small platform beneath the fifteenth century window, which is now within the small chamber (probably an oratory). This window is in three lights, and contains good remains of fifteenth century coloured glass:—St Christopher and the Divine Infant, in the middle light; with St Thomas of Canterbury carrying the Canterbury Cross and wearing an episcopal glove on his left hand and a ring on his right hand, in the light on the right hand side. The left hand light contains the head and shoulders of a figure, the remainder of which is lost. The robe is of ermine—a symbol of majesty—the right hand is raised in blessing. There was a representation of God the Father in the east windows of both St. Edmund’s and St. Thomas’, and, as is generally known, Henry Sherfield, the Recorder in Laud’s time, obtained leave to replace the figure in St. Edmund’s Church by clear glass, but to show publicly his great hatred of idolatry, he smashed the window with his staff, for which he was punished by the Star Chamber, and to prevent a possible scandal of the same kind at St. Thomas’, Mr. Sub-Dean ordered the figure to be removed from St. Thomas’ east window. The Churchwardens’ accounts for 1583 include a payment of 4d. to “Hacker for puttinge ouте the picture of the father in ye east windowe at Mr. Subdean’s commaundment.” In later days this fragment of glass was found and placed in this window, but passed as a representation of St. Osmund. When complete, the figure was apparently a representation of the Trinity.

There are two small lights of an ancient window, now in the Salisbury Museum, which were taken from the Tailors’ Hall a few years ago, when the place was sold. One of these lights contains a representation of St. Christopher and the infant Christ, and the other a representation of the Madonna and Child. In pre-Reformation times it was customary in London and all other large cities or towns in which the Craft Guilds were founded, for these Fraternities to carry giants, which were a great feature in their processions and religious plays. In some towns as many as four giants appeared on these occasions, but in towns where only one giant was kept, as, at Salisbury, it was invariably owned by the Tailors' Guild. This Guild not only supplied the attendants and the Morris dancers, but provided the quaint dresses for them, and generally took the leading part, especially at the "Midsummer Watch." Probably this was owing to the fact that it was customary to set the "Midsummer Watch" upon the eve of St. John the Baptist (the Tailors' patron saint) with a grand pageant. Upon this important occasion, after the Mayor and Corporation, who took part in this function as members of the Guild of St. George, and who were upon such occasions accompanied by the "armed men," the waites or City minstrels, the mace-bearers and other officials, the Tailors' Guild made the most imposing show. Important regulations were made for dressing the Giant and preparing him for these festivals. In the procession he appeared at the head of the Tailors' Guild with his two Esquires, one bearing the great two-handled sword, and the other his mace (which the late Mr. Edward Stevens suggested, represented a cresset or lanthorn, such as was carried during these night watches), and accompanied by the Hobnob, or Hobby-horse, as his mounted page, and the Morris dancers. It may be of interest to give the following extract from Puttenham, in his Arte of English Poesie published in London, 1589. Speaking of the Midsummer Pageants in London, he says, on page 128:—

"Where to make the people wonder, are set forth great and uglie Giants, marching as if they were alive, and armed at all points, but within they are stuffed full of brown paper and tow, which the shrewd boys underpeeping do guilefully discover, and turn to a great derision." There were four of these giants belonging to the Guilds in the City of Chester, made, as usual, from boards, buckram, tinsel, &c., and a quaint entry appears in the City accounts for the year 1599, as follows:—"Ye going of ye Giantes att Myd-sommer xvi d. for arsenic to putt into the paste, to save the Giantes from being eaten by rats."
CHAPTER XII.

EXTRACTS FROM THE FRATERNITY'S LEDGER.

In a preceding chapter the contents of Swayne's Ledger were fully described, and we may now return to the oldest book of the Tailors' Guild, which, as has already been explained, appears to have been laid aside when Swayne's Ledger was provided, but was again brought into use when that book was filled with entries. At this time (1500—1520) the meetings of the Guild were held every six months, one taking place in January and the other in July. At each of these assemblies new members were admitted to the Fraternity, and upon some of these occasions as many as 12 were enrolled. The record of a Convocation of the Tailors of the City of New Sarum, held at the Grey Friars on the 8th day of July, in the 9th year of Henry VIII. (1518), contains the names of no less than 88 members who were present upon that occasion, and also the names of seven men who were sworn in as free brothers at the same meeting. Except upon four occasions, which occurred during the Mayoralty of William Swayne, when meetings of the Tailors' Guild were held at the Council House, all the assemblies of this Fraternity which took place from January 10th, 1451, until July 2nd, 1533, were held in the Common Hall of the Friars-Minors, or Grey Friars, which stood in Freren Street (the present Friary). The final gathering of the Tailors within the precincts of this convent occurred on the last named date, and from this time until the Guild became defunct in the year 1880, all assemblies, entertainments and feasts of the Fraternity were held in a commodious hall and mansion house which the Fraternity had built for themselves in Milford Street. It may be added that a portion of this building is still in existence, but it is in a state of great dilapidation, and is used as a store.

The following extract is taken from the report of the first meeting, which was held in the Tailors’ Hall:

“At the assemble holden at the Tayllors Halle there the XX day of January yn the XXV yere of the reigne of our Sovraign Lorde Kyng Henry VIII (1534) it is enactid condiscendid and agreed that for as moche as the wardens aboue rehearsed wt th’assente of the whole crafte and fraternity and at there costes and charges haue nowe edified and buylded a convenyent Mansion house and place in and uppon there owne ground, that the said place and house at all tymes from hensforth shalbe notyd the Tayllours Halle, and that all assemblies, reformacions, and all other thynges meet, convenyent, and insident to the said occupacion, shalbe always in tymes to come there, and no where els, kept and duly executeyd, and that all suche persones of the said craft, whiche hathe given any thyng to the edifieing of the said place, shall at all tymes hereafter frely vse possede and enjoye the said house for there dynrs, and other insident and commable accostumes belonging to the said occupacion wt the lyncence and consent of the wardens for the tyme byng, and also that all suche persones of the said mystery wch of there froward myndes at this tyme wyl not give any thyng to the buylidyng of the said place, shall loose the fredom of the same, and there shall kepe there dynrs that notwtstandyng, and shall paye for the occupieng of the same, as shalbe thought mete and conuenyent by the wardens for the tyme beyng.”

At a meeting which was held on November 21st, 1541, the following interesting entry appears:

“At this assembly it is ordeyned and agreyd by the persons that hathe aperyd at this tyme that Robert Griffithe (warden) shall assigne a preist whiche is an honest man, to serve from the fest of the Natuyyte of or Lorde God, vnto the fest of the Annunciacion of our Blessed Lady then next folouinge, and that the saide preist shall dept at the said fest of our lady day, wtout any warning. Also it is agreyde that Sr George now morowe-masse preist, at Saynct Thomas Churche, shall shall in the seruyce at the sayde fest of the Annunciacion of our lady.”

The minutes of the meetings which were held during the last five years of the reign of Henry VIII.
are not of great interest, they relate principally to the admission of apprentices and new members, lists of the fines and fees received by the Chamberlain, the voluntary payments towards the expenses of St. Osmund’s watch, and regulations concerning the midsummer feast, e.g. :—

“10th July in the 36 year of the reign of King Henry VIII.

for Seynte Osmund’s watche iii s. vi d. Wyllm. Chambarlayne for hys opsettyng dellyured to the hands of John Nycholas xx d. John Combar for hys upsettyng iii s. iv d.”

The Ledgers contain no records of the Guild during the reign of Edward VI., but from other sources we find that the Chantry possessions of the Tailors’ Fraternity were amongst the pro-properties that were seized by the Commissioners of Edward VI. at their visitation to Wiltshire, in the second year of his reign. An interesting paper upon Wiltshire Chantry Furniture by the Rev. Canon Jackson, appears in Vol. 22 of the Wiltshire Archaeological Magazine. This paper includes an inventory of the furniture of 37 Chantries, which was seized by the Crown Commissioners in the second year of Edward VI., and which was sold by them to Thomas Chafyn, of Mere. This inventory is taken from an old document dated 15th June, 1548, which was found among the papers belonging to the late Miss Chafyn-Grove, of Zeals House. Of the 37
Chantries therein enumerated, 15 were in the City of Salisbury, viz., 9 at the Cathedral, 2 at St. Edmund's Church, and 4 at St. Thomas' Church. Those which were in St. Thomas' Church, viz., Swayne's, Godmanstone's, Warwick's and the Tailors' Fraternity, appear first on the inventory, which commences as follows:

The Countie of Wiltshire, The Inventore off all such goods and ornaments as dyd appertayne to all the Chauntries, Free Chapels, Guildes, and fraternyties, within the said Countie.

Robert Gryffythe, who was stated to have bought the chalice and spent the money upon repairs to the property of the Fraternity, was Master or Senior Warden of the Guild at the time. Mr. Jackson, in the paper referred to,

* It may be stated that “Dornyx” was a fine damask; “bodkyn” a costly silk stuff worked in gold thread; a “bruges” a satin made at Bruges; and “lockeram” a coarse linen made in Brittany.
speaking of the contents of the Hungerford Chantry in the Cathedral, and Swayne's at St. Thomas', says:—"It is evident, from the inferior quality of the articles described in the list, that those of a more valuable kind, not only in the two Chantries above mentioned, but probably in many others also, had been previously selected and disposed of in some different way."

The Tailors' Guild rapidly increased in numbers, more especially during the reign of Henry VIII., when occasionally 90 members were present at their assemblies, but, as before stated, no information respecting the Guild appears in the Ledgers during the seven years of the succeeding reign. Apparently the corporate life of the Fraternity was almost destroyed after the confiscation of their Chantry possessions, and it was not until the third year of Queen Mary, when the assemblies of the Fraternity were resuscitated, that the records of the Guild again appear in the old Ledgers. On March 20th, 1556, only three days before the Martyrdom of Maundrel and his companions at Salisbury, the Mayor and Corporation revived the annual dirges, which had been formerly celebrated in St. Thomas' Church:—"Whereas three dirges have been yearly sung, heretofore, in the Church of St. Thomas, Sarum, for the founders and benefactors of this house, and for certain causes let down since the beginning of King Edward VI., it is agreed that the said three dirges be yearly kept," &c., &c. On the 19th of July, 1556, a meeting of the Guild was held at the Tailors' Hall. The minutes of this assembly are extremely interesting. In the first place they show that the six brothers who had held office at the time of the spoliation of their Chantry eight years previously, were again filling the same positions, including Robert Gryffythe, the senior warden, who was successful in his attempt to save from seizure the silver chalice belonging to the Guild Altar; and apparently he was able to preserve it for the future use of the Fraternity. Another interesting feature in the record of this meeting is that the names of only 33 members, including the six officials before alluded to, are entered as being present at the first part of the assembly, when the business was opened, but there appears later on in the minutes of the same meeting the names (the greater part of these being signatures) of no less than 42 men. These men were not sworn and admitted in the ordinary way, as new members, each paying a fee, but they were specially sworn, and a cross carefully drawn, appears at the end of each name, this being the only occasion upon which such a symbol appears in connection with the names of members who were admitted to the Guild. It may possibly be that the 27 brothers, and the six officials, represented those members of the Fraternity who had remained loyal and faithful to the old religion, and that the 42 were a portion of the majority who had accepted the Reformation, and who now were compelled to be sworn in this special way before they were granted re-admission to the privileges of the Guild. If this were so, and the majority, of which the 42 members formed a part, had obtained possession of the Hall and had carried on the business of the Guild during Edward’s reign, it would account for the absence of any records of the Fraternity during this reign, especially if Robert Gryffythe, who apparently was a man of strong character, kept possession of the two regular books of the Guild. The following extracts are taken from the report of this meeting:—

“Assemble holden the 19 off July in the present yere off the raygn of Kynge Phyllyp the fryste, an the thurde yere off the rygn off Quene Mary, by the grace of God, Kynge an Quene of England, France, Naples, Jerusalem and Ireland, Prynces off Spain, of Cicyllie, Archewedke of Astryge, Duke of Mylane, Burgnde and Brabend, Erles of Gascony, Flanders and Tyrell.

At an assemble holden the 6th of June in the 4th and 5th yeres of the raygne of Kynge Phyllyp and Queen Mary (1558) there were present Richard Bryan and Thomas Cator, Wardens, and also fifty members, whose names are recorded. At this meeting the following resolution was agreed to:—

“Att this assemble it is agreed that vpon the Saturday next after the Nativitie of Seynte John the Baptiste, next comynge, the Stuarde of the occupation of this fraternite shall for dyverse good consideracions, cause a solemne dirige to be kepte in Seynte Thomas Churche accordynge to the olde custom, and the Sonday shallbe kept the obitt Masse, and the same day they shall brynge in theire light, and make a good and honest dyner to the Wardens and Maisters, also it is condescended and agreed that whosoever of the Maisters shall be absent without a lawful cause at anye tyme herafter from the dirige, obit Masse, or bryngynge in of the light, shall forfeit to the use of the said occupation, oone pounde of waxe.”

The next entry which appears in the book is the report of a meeting which was held in the 2nd year of Queen Elizabeth, and it may be of interest to give the names of those present at this meeting:

“Thomas Gater, the yere of oure Lorde God 1561, the xxx daye of January, and the iiiith yere of our Soverain Ladye Elyzabethe, Queene of Englane &c. did geve unto the s fra- ternitie, mystery & occupa’con of the Taylers of the Citie of New Sarum, A Seale, called the Comon Sele of the Wardens of the occupa’con and mystery aforesaid.”

It will be seen from the subjoined extract that in February, 1561, the Wardens at that time, Edmonde Wyckwith and Robert Wall, commenced in the Ledger a list of the names of all apprentices who were made freemen of the Guild, and also the names of the Masters under whom they had served their apprenticeship. The first part of the list appears to have been collected by the above named Wardens from the ancient Ledger for the preceding 100 years, that is to say, from the time of Edward IV.’s Charter in 1461, and it will be noticed that the Wardens express a hope that their successors in office will continue the list so begun. It may be of interest to state that the entries of the names were con- tinued in the same list until the year 1838, when, there being no more room in the old book, the list of names was continued in the modern or No. 7 Ledger.

On the 26th of February, 1561, there is the following entry:—

"At thys assemble yt ys agreed and enactyed, that from hensforth, all the company shall sytt yn order at our assemble, and that no man shall move outhe of hys place without he have som what to say to the wardyns, and then all men else to kepe

. . . Also at thys assemble yt ys agreed that John Maynard and John Pope, ys allowed to be searchers, to know who workes yn mens howsys, and to present them and there garments before the wardens, and they to be ponysshed, or to paye such ffyne as the wardens shall thyneck good, and yt ys agreed that from hensforth as many as mynd to sett up shopp, shall come fyyst tunto the Wardens and axke them leve fior ther upsyttynge, and then the Wardens for to send them to the viewers for to try ther worck-ma-shipp, and yff the sayd soers (viewers) do alowe them, then they paying ther dutyes, to have the freredome of the ocupacion as others have, or here to fore have hadd, and the viewers to sartify the wardens what they have done. . . .

Alexander Young was sworne an he payd for hys upsyttynge vi s. viii d., and that he shall make a brekefast for ten persons the Monday before All Sayntes———."
On February 16th, 1563, there is the following:

"Yt ys a-greyd at this assemblye that Lyonell Tytchebourn and Xpofer Harryson, Wardens of our Corporacon, shall travell to take ye advyse of some lernyed man, for the behofi and makynge of some order, that we have at this Assembly (? discussed) concernyng ye fynes of such as shall come and crave to sett upp wthin this Citie, not beyng prentys, and suche some or some of money, as shalbe reasonably layde owt abowte the same, shalbe allowyed by ye hole body of this Company."

"Also yt ys agreyd, that after the ffeast of All Sayntes, next comyng, Richard Glasebroke, Thomas Bee and George Clerke, hath bound themselyffs and eury of them, to make no manner of worke but mens garments pertaynyng to the back, the hose exceptyd, and at every tyme that they or any of them do to the contrary, to paye unto oure comen boxe xl s. of lawful money of England."

At the following meeting, the same three members were ordered to make no hose under a penalty of xx s. and also 3 days' imprisonment. Other members were ordered to make women's work only, under the same penalty, whilst others were ordered to make no garment except hose and doublets, under a penalty of xxv s. At the same meeting it was agreed that "Henrye Alexander shall sett upp for wommens hose, mens stockins, and boote-hose, and to meddell with no other garments uppon Payne of xl s. for everye offence, & so that he make the ffraternitye a brekefaste, before his Upsettinge, at any tyme convenient, when the wardens shall think good." The Ledger also states that Myles Lyndall gave the brethren a gallon of Wyne, and was pardoned of his breakfaste.

At a meeting held in the 9th of Elizabeth, 1566, at which there were present 67 members, a petition was received from the Salisbury Craft of Skinners, requesting the Tailors not to allow their members to interfere with the work of the Skinners, and the following order was made by the Tailors' Company, for which the Skinners paid them 20s.:

"It is ordered, condecended and agreed, that no brother or master of this occupacion shall use the craft of skynnenge, or ffurrenge of any kind of garment for man or woman, upon payne of vi s. viii d. Also that neither Anthony Lambert, his wyffe nor any of his prenteces, after the feast of the Nativity of Chryste next ensuing, shall use or exercise the craft of ffurrginge of anye garment or garments then there for his or their profit, upon payne of xl s. fyne."

At the same meeting several leases of property belonging to the Company were granted, including:

"Ower comer howse in love lane to Phyllipp Lydyatt for 21 yeres, at xx s. per yere. A tenement in Endless St., in the tenure of Thomas Popley, gent, unto the said Thomas Popley for 21 yeres. A tenement in Tanner St. now in the tenure of John Burton tinker, unto the sayd John for 21 yeres."

The next three extracts refer to the Giant, the Hobby-horse, the Morris dancers, and the coats or dresses of the Morris dancers, with the small bells which were used and worn by the Morris dancers. These bells were probably imported from Milan, and, therefore, were called Myllan bells.

"22nd September, 1564: At thys assembly was receyuyd for the puttynge owt of the Morrys Cots iii s. iv d. and yt ys agreyd that Gregory Clerke shall have the kepynge of the ffyve morrys-cots, with xxti dosyn of Myllan-bells, for the space of xii yeres, yf he so longe lyve, payeng yerely to the occupacon iii s. iv d., and also the said Gregory do stand bound to the occupacon in the some of ffive pounds of lawfull money of England, to delyver the same ffyve morrys cots and xx doysen of Myllan-bells, at thend of the said xii yeres, or at the oure of death of the said Gregory if he dye before, in as good case as he receyved it, and further the said Gregory byndyth hymself by these presents to delyver the said Cotts and bells at all tymes to the said occupation yf they wyll haue them to the use of" the ocupacion, and yt ys agreyd that the said Gregory shalbe bound to the Wardens of the ocupacion, by wrytyng, obligatory in the some of fyyve poundes."

"May 24th, 1570: At thys Assemblie, Gregory Clark dyd promisse, covenant and graunte to and with the wardens, chamberlaynes, stewards, and the rest of the bodie of the company, for and duringe the hole tyme of fyyve yeares from the feast of Saynte John the Baptyst next folloinge the day of this assemblie fully to be complete and endyd, to fynde and sett goinge for the accustomed pageant of Mydsomer feaste, the Gyant, the thre black boyes, the bearer of the gyant, and one person to playe the Divells part, at the proper costes and charges of the sayed Gregorye, as well in victualles of the parties aforesayed, as the repayringe of the Gyant, and the wagis of all and singular the parties aforesayed. - And the sayed Wardens, Chamberlaines, Stewerds, and the rest of the bodye of the Companie for ther part dothe promisse, covenant, and graunte to and with the sayed Gregorie Clark, that he the sayd Gregorie, in consideracion of the aforesayed chargis, and travell (work) of the sayd Gregorie, shall have the hole cost of the howse and garden, whereas now the sayed Gyant standyth to his proper gayne and comoditie, with licence to lett and sett the same duryng all the terme aforesayed, and besides shall receive yerelie duryng the terme aforesayed of the sayd Wardens, Chamberlaynes, and the rest of the Companye x s. of good and lawfull money of England, to be payed at Mydsummer feast yearely. And it is agreed that for the repayreinge and new sowinge of the Gyants Coat, provision shalbe made that the sayed Companie, or some of them, shall bestowe ther labor and payne without anye chargis to the sayd Gregorie, and he the sayed Gregorie promussetheth covenanthed and grauntheth, to render the sayed Gyant hole and perfeyct in all his proporcions, with all and singular his implements and appurtenances, at the ende of his sayed terme, to the sayed Wardens, Chamberlaines, Stewerds, an the reste of the Companie, and yelde uppe under the name of appurtenances, all as contayned in the Divells apparell, and thre payer of slops for the three blacke boyes."

"June 10th, 1570: It is agreed that from henseforth anye honeste learned man preachinge at the ordinarie feast at Mydsomer, shalbe allowed for his sermon and paynes, takinge it oute of the Common Cheste of the Companie."

"At the audit holden at the Taylors Hall, the xxv of Februarie in the xiv yeare of the raigne of o’r Soveraigne ladie
THE SALISBURY GIANT AND HOBNOB.
(Salisbury Museum).
Elizabethe, the Queenes Maiestie that nowe is, before the Wardens and masters of the Company at the audit, Thomas Barker dyd bringe in one Hobby-Horse, and one mayde Marrians Coate, with a kertell, and a gyrdell of red crimson sarcenet, and a cloke and a vellet cappe, which hobby-horse and other parcells were delyvered to William Younge, Chamberlaine."

Lord Orford, in his Catalogue of English Engravers, has described two paintings at Lord Fitzwilliam’s, "On Richmond Green," which came out of the old neighbouring palace. They were executed by Vinckenboom about the end of the reign of James I. In one of these pictures a Morris Dance is introduced, consisting of seven figures, viz., a fool, hobby-horse, piper, Maid Marian, and three other dancers.

The Morris dance, in which bells are jingled, or staves clashed, was learned, says Dr. Johnson, by the Moors, and was probably a kind of Pyrrhic, or Military dance. "Morisco," says Blount, "a Moor; also a dance, so called, wherein there were usually five men, and a boy dressed in girl’s habit, who they call Maid Marian, or perhaps, Morian, from the Italian Morione, a head-piece, because her head was wont to be gaily trimmed up; common people call it a Morris dance."

The ancient Chrysom Book of St. Thomas’ Church shows that frequent offerings were made by the Tailors’ Company, e.g., "Weddyngs, offrings, and Churchewyves from ye feast of St. John Baptist vnto ye feast of St. Mychall th’archangell 1569. Item. The Master and allso the master talors ii s. ix d. Item. The Joynemen xxii d ; sum iv s. vii d. Item. The Matrs. and the talors at Mydsummer v s."

OTHER EXTRACTS FROM THE LEDGER ARE AS UNDER:

“June 10th. 14th Elizabeth (1571). At this assemblie, it is agreed that John Stephens, Carpenter, shalle have two teny-mentes in a streate neere to the Trinitie and Blackbridge by lease for xxi yeares, for the fyne of fyften shillings and to have it lykewyse with covenantes to repayer it and to kepe it.”

“January 20th. 16th Elizabeth (1574). At this assemblie Roger Worlye, sometyne a brother of this companie, but havinge lost his freedome ipso facto for that he was arraigned of Treason comitted against the Quenes Maiestie, and there uppon tried and fowned gyltie, and therefor was to be executed and suffer deathe, but as that the Quenes Maiestie of her graciuose goodness gave him her ffree pardone for his lyfe made uppon his humble supplication, and that how be it uppon the matter before rehearsed, he have lost his freedome, the Companie wold, that notwithstanding, deale favorablie with him, and receyve him into the companie agayne, uppon which humble supplication, the companie consideringe his neccessitie, have receyved him the said Roger into the companie again, conditionallie, that he acknoledge sictche debtes as he owethe toanye of this companie and siche orders for the sane within six dayes next after this assemblie, And that he shall not open his windowes or workes before he hath made goode certificate of the same to the wardens, and it is also conditioned that he the sayd Roger, shall for this goodwill of the companie, make the sayed Companie a reasonable breakfaste, within one monthe after commandment of the same geven to him by the Wardens for the time being.”

At the following meeting, serious complaint was made to the Wardens against this Roger Worley for abusing and using “fowle words” against others of the Company. He was ordered to pay 10s. to the common box, to be levied upon his goods, and also to at once provide the breakfast before alluded to. Worley appears to have been a troublesome member as also was Richard Stevenson, who was finally, in 1575, expelled from the Company.
"June 3rd, 1575. By the hole consente of all assembled at this present assemble, Richard Stevenson for his great and notorious obstinancie and disobedience in refusinge to come to the wardens at theire commandment, and for his gevinge fowle and naughtie words to the officers, to the discrede of the authorite of the Wardens, and the charter of this companie, is accordinge to an order and act of this Companie utterly exiled owte of the sayed companie and brotherhood for ever."

"An Assemblye holden at the Taylours Hall on the 10 March, in the first year of our Sovereign Lord James the Kinge" (1603) present 52 members. "At this Assemblye yt is agreed and ordered that the Charter of this Corporacon shalbe renewed and confirmed, and that if any imperfecon or want of words, or articles, shalbe founde within the sayde Charter, that then the same to be added and obteyned for the good benefitt of this Corporacon, and the chardges that shalbe fitt to be disbursed conc'ninge, and about the procuringe and obteyninge thereof shalbe borne and dischardged by this Corporacon. And the orderinge of the sayde bussiness is referred to the discrecons of the Wardens of this Corporacon and Mr. Ellyott, Mr. Barrington, Robert Martyn, John Deane, Richard Walford, and John Snooke, or to any sixe of them.”

“A Semblye held at Taylors Hall on the 3 June in the third year of our Sovereign Lord James (1606). At this Assemblye yt is a graude that William Persivall paynter, shall have a graunte of a lease of our Messuage or Tenement, backside and garden with thappertences, for xxi yeares, to begin at the feeaste of our Lady St. Mary the Virgine next, the fyne to paye L s and thecoloringe of our window, and to paye yearley, xii s. vi d. at fower feastes or teames in the yeare most usuall.”

William Persivall the Paynter was probably the same person as the Mr. Percival who was paid six pounds in 1630 by the City Corporation for painting the Pictures of King Charles I, Queen Henrietta and William the third Earl of Pembroke. The last named Portrait is at present in the Banqueting Room at the Council House, and it may be of interest to state that amongst the names of those who subscribed towards the expenses of obtaining the Charter of Incorporation for the City in 1612 are those of John Percivall and William Percivall, who are described as picture-drawers.

“An Assemblye held at the Taylors Hall on the 10 day of June in the sixth year of our Sovereign Lord James the Kinge” (1608) . . . . “Whereas dyvers persones do use the Misterye of taylors within this cittye having not byn allowed or admitted by the Wardens of this Corporacon to use the sayd misterye, contrarye to the constitutions of this Corporacon, & who refuse to paye ye xl s. according to the sayd constitucons, and neyther haethe yielded his body and person. At this assemblye yt is ordered & agreed by the Companye here presente that the Wardens by this (authority ?) with three or fower, or more, of yelders of this Corporacon, shall reteyne counsell on the behalfe of this Corporacon, and to prosecute any suite or suites and actions against the sayde persons or any of them, which in their sounde discrecons shalbe thought moste meete and convenyent, the chardges whereof shalbe payd and dis-charge by the Chamberleyne of this Corporacon.”
"September 10. sixth year of James I (1608). At this assembly ytt is a-greed that the some of x li. parcell of the stock of this Corporacon shalbe taken out of the Cheste, and payd and employed in buyeinge of Rye, or other grayne, for the relyffe of the poore of this Corporacon, and that Edmonde Watson, one of the Wardens of this Corporacon, Richard Wolford and John Hulett, shall have the oversighe and imploymemente thereof, and for the delyverye of the sayde corne, & receipte of the sayde monyes, and to holde accompte thereof."

The Calendar of State Papers, published by the Record Office, contains, under the date June 30th, 1611, particulars of the committal to prison of the Wardens of the Tailors' Company of New Sarum for patronising Morris dances on a Sunday.

The following extract refers to a donation of ten pounds which the Tailors' Company gave to the fund that was raised in Salisbury during 1611—12, to pay the cost of procuring from James I. the City’s Charter of Incorporation:

"At an assembly held at the Taylors Hall on the 10th of January in the ninth year of our Sovereign Lord James the Kinge, yt is ordered & agreed by the greatest number of this companye that this Corporacon doth give freely to the Maior and Cominaltye of this Cittye, as of their meare goodwill as lovinge neibboures wishinge all good prosperitye to the generall good of this Cittye, the some of Tenn powndes, which some shalbe delyvered by the Wardens & fower of the elders, viz., Mr. William Eaton, Henry Lane, John Longman and John Snooke, and the Chamberlain John Gifford, of this Corporacon, with protestacon that this Corporacon doth not give it, nor will not give it, to any other purpose, but in love and good will and to have the like good will and assistance from them for the strentheninge of this Corporacon, and the government of the same alreadye established, in such thinges as doe belonge to the government of this Corporacon by the laws of this realtime."

Further extracts from the Ledger are appended:

"Nov. 25, 1612. At this assembly Jeffreye Hatten, the daye and yeare above wryten, the late apprentice with Symon Wyrley a fre brother of this Corporacon, who servyd the saided Symon Wyrley as an apprentice in the arte and mysterye of a tayler by indenture, hath been vewed & provyd a suffcyent worckman & hath given his breakefast & taken the othe of a brother accordyng to the orders and constyctyons of this Corporacon & payed for his admyssyon iii s. iv d., which is delyverd unto Richard Gouge, Chamberlayne. At this assembly, it is ordered and agreed that wher as John Jonnes have before this tyme sett men a worke contrraye to the orders of our Companye, if thherof the saied John Jonnes do not put a waye Jeram Burde before the xxix. daye of this monythe of November, then his bond of iii l. shalbe presently put in Sute at the dyscrecyon of the Wardens, provyded allways, that if ever the saied John Jonnes shall offend in suche manner anymore after this tyme that then the bond shalbe put in Sute without delaying any longer.”

“25th April, 1613. "Assemblie holden at the Taylors Hall on March 7 in the first yeare of the reign of our Sovereign Lord Charles the Kinge (1626): At this assembly it is ordered by a general voyce,

* It may be explained that in the years 1625-26 Salisbury suffered from a severe visitation of the Plague. A general fast had been proclaimed by the King's command in 1625, and the Corporation stopped the annual feasts and ordered the City Musicians "not to repair to Innes or houses, nor to wear their chaines and armes of the city until further notice." It was in 1626 that the Mayor John Ivie, Goldsmith, so bravely stuck to his post attending to his afflicted fellow citizens when most of his colleagues and others had fled from the city in terror. An interesting pamphlet, published by John Ivie in 1661, giving an account of his Mayoralty, says: "there was near the like judgement upon one Stout, a tailor. The Tailor's would have kept their accustomed feast for those of their company who were left in the city, but I would not suffer them. Nevertheless, this Stout and five more would keep a feast; but that same week they were all dead of the plague save one."—This pamphlet, an original copy of which is in the Salisbury Public Library, was reprinted a few years ago under the editorship of Mr. A. R. Malden.
that David Hobbes being a younger of this howse, hauing injured and abused by opprobrious an outrageous speeches John Gifford an elder of this Companye & alsoe demeaninge himselfe to be a turbulent member of the same howse, to the discouragement of the companye & the evill example of others of the same Corporac'on, therefore yt is thought fittinge & ordered that the saied David Hobbes shalbe fyned v s. for his abuse aforesaid offered."

"Assembly held at the Taylors Hall on May 2nd in the seventh yeare of our Sovereign Lord Charles the Kinge (1631): It is agreed by the general consente of this Corporac'on, that fortie shillings shalbe given owte of the Stocke of the Corporac'on towards the castinge of the Bell in St. Thomas Churche Tower, called Cole Taylor wch. is the free guifte of this Corporac'on, and this Corporac'on dothe desire that some noate be taken from & under the hands of the Churchwardens testifyinge the receipte thereof as the free guifte of this Corporac'on & the chamberlayne is appointed to paye the same."*

pany. The Chamberlain’s bond was given by him as security, and the bonds of the ten members represented loans which had been made from the stock of the Corporation; these loans of £5 each were made to the members free of interest, but each bond was backed or endorsed by two sureties for £5 each.

June 20th, 1633. “Mem’d, That att this assemblie, it is ordered by the maio’r voyces, that the feaste wych contynued heretofore 2 daies, is now ordered to contynue but one daie, w’ch feaste daie shalbe kept the xvth daie of July next. It is alsoe ordered that the expences of the companye at the feaste before menconed, is agreed to be as is hereunder menconed and expressed, vizt.

At the following meeting, which was held on July 3rd (that is twelve days before the proposed feast) :

“Itt is ordered that the feaste shalbe holden twoe dayes at the Tailers Hall notwithstandinge the order made at the last assemblye touchinge the same, and that eu’ry brother & sister of this companye shall pay towards the same feaste for those twoe dayes, after the same rate made at the last assemblye .. . . . And it is agreed and consented unto by the maior parte of the companye, that the ancient sports shalbe contynued on the feaste daies, accordinge to the ancient custome” . . . .

money is imposed an sett vpon X’pofer Smith one of the brethren of this companye for deridinge and scoffinge Augustine Creed and Thomas Jarvis, Wardens of this Companye, by vrteringe theis words following, vizt. (Praie make an order that eu’ry one of this companye may wear belles on their leggs), and it is ordered that Mr. Chamberlayne shall demaunde the same fyne of the said X’profer Smith, and if he shall not pay the same vpon the same demaunde, that then the said X’profer shalbe sued for the same fyne.”

Sep. 17th, 1634. At this meeting a lease was granted to Michael Mackrell, gent., of a house in Tanner Street (now St. Ann Street), and the fine of £35 which he paid was lent in sums of £5 each to seven members, each of whom gave his bond, backed by two sureties of £5 each.

“March 13th, 1636: Memorandm. that at this assembly with the consent of the whole Corporation aforesaid, The Tailors Hall is lett to Mr. Michael Mackerell and James Haylocke, Wardens of the Society of Clothworkers within the said citie, to have the use of the lower Hall for keeping their assembly, and of the upper (H)all, and all the rest of the said Taylors Hall to keep their Feast, and they are also to have the use of the same for seaven yeares from Xmas last, at ten shillings per anno, to be paid at Midsummer an Xmas, and the said Mr. Mackerell & Haylocke are to repaire whatsoever shall be spoiled by them or that this company demands.”

The next two extracts refer to William Gillowe, whose portrait hangs in the entrance hall of the Council House. The picture, which depicts William Gillowe in the Puritan dress of the Commonwealth period, hung with several others for many years in the Tailors’ Hall. It was presented to the Salisbury Corporation by Dr. H. P. Blackmore in 1907:—

“August 14, 1637: Memorand’m, that at this assemblye William Gillowe, hathe for gaining his freedom paid to the use of this Corpora’con fynve poundes, whereof one pounde is delivered to the saide Chamberlaine and the other four poundes is lent to the saide William Gillowe, to be repaid unto this company by one pounde per anno until it be paid, for the payment of which four poundes accordinglye, the saide William Gillowe hathe given his bond to this company. Memorand’m, That at this Assembly after the payment of the fyve poundes the saide William Gillowe, having made his breakefaste, and his prooфе piece of worke, and taken the oathe of Supremacy, and the oathe of the howse also, is admitted a free brother of this Company. Memorand’m, that the saide William Gillowe’s bond is putt into the Cheste, and it is ordered that James Day shall be forthwithe sued for using the trade of a tailor contrary to the orders of this Corpora’con.”

“October 25th, 1658 : At this assembly John Flower, one of the elders of this Corpora’con is elected and chosen Warden of the saide Corpora’con, to remain and continue in his office of Wardenship in the steade of William Gillowe, one of the late Wardens of this Corpora’con deceased, until the Thursday next after the feast of the Epiphany next ensueing, the saide John Flower having taken the oathe of the Warden, as it hathe been accustomed.”

During the time of the Great Rebellion, the two days’ Midsummer Feast, with its sports and the procession to the Cathedral and St. Thomas’ Church, were suspended, a quiet dinner for the members and their wives taking the place of the ancient custom of thanksgiving and rejoicing. At a meeting which was held a few months after the City had been occupied by the Parliamentary General, Sir Edward Hungerford, who, after seizing all the money, plate, and arms he could find in the City, forced the inhabitants to purchase exemption from further plunder by a contribution of £1500, it was ordered and agreed, “‘That instead of the feast comunly held about Midsomer, there shalbe a meeteinge together of suche of the companye as please to come att the said hall on monday the fower and twentieth day of July next cominge, and that there shalbe on that day, only a dynner for the said companye and their wyves and soe if they please they may departe.”
June 18th, 1640. "Att this assemblye it is agreed that instead of the feaste comonly held about Midsomer, and in regarde of a general flaste throughout the Kingdome, there shalbe a Solemne Assemblye or Meeteing holden on Monday the sixth day of Julie nexte, and that there shalbe on that day, only a dynner for the whole companye and theire wyves, and that for eury cowple there present they shall spend theire 2s. viz. 1s. a peice and soe for eury single man, and eury one that shall bringe a child w' th him shall pay vi d. for him. And alsoe that the sunday night before the said vi d day of Julie, they shall meet at St. Thomas' Churche according to theire aunciente manner and custome, and shall come from thence to theire com' on Hall with the Wardens and the rest of the Companye."

"May 6th, 1641 : At this Assembly it is agreed by the major part of this Corporation, that James Day, and other Tailors dwelling in the Close of Sarum, and Harnam, shall not by any means be admitted into this Corporation, but that Sylvester Pope, and Jo. Hulett, in the former Assembly named, shall doe their best endeavoure to get their petition in Parliament answered. Also it is agreed that we pay as expences out of the Corporation Store, for Sylvester Pope, and Jo. Hulett to go to London, to attend to this business, twentyseven pounds fourteen shillings and sixpence."

June 28th, 1641. "Att this assemblie it is ordered that eury free brother of this companye shall meete at the Tailor's Hall in Newe Sarum, on sunday vpon theire feest day at fower of the clocke in the afternoon of the same day, to attend the wardens of the said Corporac'on, and to goe w' th them to heare eveninge praier in the Cathedral Churche of the blessed Virgin Marie, and like wise to return from thence after the said praier is ended, by and through the vsual way unto the said Hall again, vpon paine that euerie free brother of this companye w' ch shall make default herein shall paie to the vse of the said Corporac'on xii d. And it is desired that eury mans servant shall attend theire Masters in going and cominge from Churche as is afore-said."

Jan. 23rd, 1642. "At this assemblie, Richard Siler, Doctor of Physick, and William Bowles, Attorney-at-lawe, are by the major parte of this companye, admitted free of this Company, but they are not to have any benefit of the howse."
The next two extracts are explained by the fact that in June, 1644, Salisbury was occupied by a part of the Parliamentary forces under the Earl of Essex, when those citizens who were favourable to the King's cause had a bad time. A few months later, viz., from December, 1644, the City was held by the Royalists under Lord Goring, when the inhabitants had again to submit to plunder, and in the early summer of 1645 there were serious skirmishes between the Royalists and the Parliamentarians in the very heart of the City.

July 10th, 1644. "Mem'd, That att this assemblye it is ordered and agreed that in regard of the troublesomenes of the tymes, there shalbe noe feste kepte, but in remembrance of that time, eu'y free brother of this companye, shall keepe faste his shop windows on the ffive and twentieth day of this instant moneth of July."

June 18th, 1645. "Memorandum, That att this assemblye it is ordered and agreed that insteade of the vsual feste kepte heretofore yearley about Midsom'r. In respect of theis distracted and sad tymes, there shalbe only a meetinge att the Hall by those of the said companye which please to come thither on Monday the last day of this instant moneth of June, and it is desired that every free brother of this companye, on that day should kepe faste his shop windows."

December 2nd, 1646. "Att this assemblye James Daye haveing payd five poundes coming into this companye as a foriner, and forty shillings for his offence for workeing unlawfully, and haveing promised to discharge what hathe ben laid out in charge of suite in the court within this city againste him lately, and having also made his profe peece of worke w'ch by the viewers is certefied to this companye to be sufficiently done, and hathe taken the oath of supremacy, and of this corporac'on, is admitted a free brother of the same."

The following appears in the report of the audit of the Chamberlain's account, which took place at the Tailors' Hall on February 4th, 1647:

"That chamberlayne Willis making vp his accomplte, there remains due to this Corporac'on 13 li. 8s. 6d., oute of w'ch he craves allowance to the some of 6 li., 18s. 1d., for makeinge a pertic’on in the courte belonginge to the Hall of this corporac’on, and removinge a plompe there; w’ch the elders not allowinge have deferred to receive his accompte vntil the next assemblie.”

February 16th, 1647. “Att this assemblie John Smith, Robert White, John Fowles, and Henry Gilbert, elders of this corporac’on are for not weareinge their gownes accordinge to an order made in that behalfe, amerced vi d. a peece. Memoran-dum, Richard Poore abused William Rose, a brother of this companye in calling him, ‘Stinkinge knave’ before the wardens and elders, and also the whole companye, and in sayinge they had delt dishonestley with Eastman.”

Richard Poore’s name appears but once in the list of the members after this date.

September 13th, 1647. “Att this assemblie, the said corporac’on doe give way and licence to John Ravener, that he may from henceforth worke privatelie at the trade of a tailor in his howse, or as a jorneyman w’th anye free man of this companye, but he may not keepe open his shop, or retayne any jorneyman, or take anye apprentice; And for this freedom he hath sealed a bill to the said corporac’on for payment of XLs. at seu’all tymes.”

The next extract is taken from the report of the last meeting of the Tailors held previous to the execution of the King. During the Civil War, Salisbury had more than once been pillaged by the forces of the contending factions, and undoubtedly great distress existed in the City at the time:—

“An Assemblie holden at the Tailors’ Hall in Newe Sarum the XIII. daie of November in the oder and twentith yeare of the raigne of our Sou’aigne Lord Charles by the grace of God, Kinge of England, Scotland, France and Irelande, defender of the faithe, Anno-q-dni 1648. Att this Assemblie it is agreed vnto and ordered by the most parte of this companye, beinge called and examyned by the poll, that the some of one hundred three score and tenne pounds, parcell of the some of Twoe hundred and Thirtie pounds, w’ch is the Stocke of this howse, shalbe shared and divided betweene the free brethren of this companye, for their better relief and susten’ac’on in theis hard and trowbesome tymes.”
This is followed by the signatures of all the brethren except eight. Apparently these eight were unable to write, and they each recorded their mark against their name.

August 31st, 1649.—"Memorand'm. That vpon paym'nt to be made by John Green, Goldsmith of the some of x li. to the Wardens of the said corporac'on, a lease and grant shall be made to the said John Green of all that messuage or tenement or Inne comonly called and known by the name of 'The Legge,'* and the garden therto belonginge in High Street alias Minster Street, within the Cittie of Newe Sarum, and of all howses, edifices, buildings, shoppes, sellers, sollers, easements, profits, commodities and advantages whatsoever, to the said tenement or Inne belonginge, or in anye-wise apperteyninge, together with the back gate situate in New St. in the said ctitie, w'th the free ingresse, egressse and regresse at all tymes to hold from Michelmas last for xli\(^{st}\) yeares, att and vnder the rent and coven'ts in the old lease w'ich said old lease is to be surrender'd."

June 14th, 1652. At this meeting it was ordered that the Midsummer feast, which had been suspended for some years, should be kept on one day only, "but that there shall be no wine drank, or spent at the seid feaste at the charge of the howse, and no strangers are to be invited."

January 7th, 1657:—At this assembly it was reported that there were 37 bonds of £5 each in the chest, and an order was made "that Mr. Chamberlayne Cucksey be paid the £3 17s. 11d. due to him," and the Chamberlain reported the receipt of twenty shillings from the Company of Clothworkers for the use of the Tailors' Hall.

April 6th, 1658:—"At this Assembly it is ordered by all, withoute anye contradiction, that there be allowed to Prudence Talbott, the wife of Nicholas Talbott one of the late brothers of this Companye, deceased, for and towards the maintenance of herself and children, the sum of six poundes, by the week, for the space of one whole year (if she continue sole and unmarried)."

"June 24, 1658: At this Assembly it is ordered that every free brother of the Corporation, shall keep his shop-window shut upon Monday the 5th daye of July next, on which day every brother of this Company, may kepe a feaste for himself, his family, and his friends (if he pleases) . . . ."

January 5th, 1659:—At this assembly, at which there were present 66 members, it was reported that the stock of money within the chest amounted to £190, and it was agreed to take from this sum £130, and to divide it amongst the members, "For theire better relief and sustentation in these hard and troublesome tymes."

November 14th, 1659. At this assembly, at which there were 65 members present, whose names are recorded, it was agreed "that eury elder of this corporac' on whoe hathe borne the office of a Warden, shall weare theire gownes unto the assemblye and continue in theire gownes vntill the assemblye be ended vpon paine of forfeiture of vi d. to the vse of this corporac' on, and to weare theire gownes to the funerals vpon the lyke forfeiture."

October 17th, 1664. "Att this assemblye Mr. John Vowles, Thomas Sandy & Wm. Nott, are fyned 2s. 6d. a piece for misbehavinge themselves towards the Wardens and corporac' on at the last assembly contrary to the orders of the same corporac' on."

November 28th, 1664. "Att this Assembly Adam Draper is fyned ii s. vi d. for misbehavinge himselfe at the last assembly & for unlawfully takinge away of halfe a crown of the howse money."

April 10th, 1665. "An Assembly of the Corporac' on of Taylors w'th in the said Citty, held at theire Com'on Hall there the xth of Aprill A°. R. R'gt Car.2Æ.de xxij Anno-q-Dni 1665."

. . . "It is agreed that Wm. Jole shall have graunt for a lease of the Tenement in Milford Streete for 31 yeares from Midsomer Day now next cominge—Rent x s. and a cowple of Capons per annum, paying 13 li. for a fyne at the sealing of the lease, and to repair with other vsual covenants."

"A vote:—Whether the order about Ringing bells when there is noe feast shall be for one day of the Solemnity, shall stand or not?—for stand 12, for not stand 18.

Whether the Bells shall ring two days or none at the next Solemnity of the feast?—for 2 days 13, for none 1—."

June 18th, 1667. "Att this Assembly it is concluded vpon by this corporac'on, that no publicke feaste shall be publickly kepte and observed by reason of the warre, troubles & dis-tracc'ons that are in this Kingdome. But it is ordered that it may be privately kepte by the brethren of this company in theire severall houses if they think it meete, vpon the first day of Julie now next cominge. . . . ii s. p'd to the Chamber w'ch was p'd for the use of the Morris Coates."

June 12th, 1668. "It is agreed againe that the generall feast day shalbe kepte & celebrated the sixeth day of July nexte accordinge to the orders & constituc'ons of the Corporacon & that the Stewards are to have iii li. for w'ch they are to give bond for keepinge 2 feasts in the yeare as heretofore accustomed in confirmacion of the order made laste assembly. And that those that shall not attende the Wardens to Churche and from Churche and at the Hall accordinge to the orders by themselves or theire servants shall incur the penalties in the orders for such offences imposed."

"25 february 1670. xxij Car. II. The order is sealed for the surrender of certaine lands sutuate in Downton in the County of Wilts, to convey the same vnto Gyles Lydcott Esqr., his heirs and assignes w'ch said lands were lately conveyed vnto them the Wardens & Coi'alty of the Mistery above seid & theire successors or assignes by the said Gyles Lydcott for the life of Edmund Macks, gent. vpon the considerac'on of the sume of Tenne pounds, w'ch said Tenne pounds are to be paid to the said Corporac'on by the said Gyles Lydcott or his assignes."

Jany. 10th, 1683. "Att this assemblye Samuel ffishlake beinge removed out of this citty of New Sarum, & refuseinge to serve in the office of Steward for the Corporac'on is by the Wardens and major parte of the elders of the same corporac'on fyned xxx s. for removinge & refusing to execute the said office."
Sep. 26, 1684. "At this Assemblye it is ordered that whereas Wm. Barnefather beinge in prison detaine at the suite of this Corporac' on on an acc'on brought on a bond for paymt. of V li., & havinge now pd. 20s. in parte thereof & promisinge to pay the remainder 10s. a quarter & requestinge the corporac' on for his inlarg'mt. That he be discharged out of prison, provided that the reste of creditors at whose suite the sd. Barnefather is or shall be detaine doe likewise release him out of prison."

* The Pott and Limbeck was an Inn, vide pages 191, 206 and 214. Alembic, a vessel formerly used for distilling. Shakspeare in Macbeth, act i, sc. 7, calls it "a limbeck," but that is a contracted form. Murray's Dictionary says:—"Alembic: an apparatus formerly used in distilling, consisting of a cucurbit or gourd-shaped vessel containing the substance to be distilled, surmounted by the head or cap, or alembic proper, the beak of which conveyed the vaporous products to a receiver in which they were condensed. It is now superseded by the retort and worm-still."
The Corporation Assessment Books for this period show that the Tailors were also the owners of over 30 other properties in the City, viz.:

Swayne’s Chequer, Tailors’ Hall, land & cottages

July 19th, 1713. "At this assembly the votes of the house were called whether Thos. Lush should renew his Lease for eleven pounds, or for Ten pounds and a barrell of beer, and the majority of the house voted, that Mr. Thomas Lush should renew for eleven pounds & a barrell of beer."

"1714. The Chamberlain's oath. I . . . . one of this Corporation, being elected and chosen Chamberlain of the said Corporation for one year now next ensuing, by means whereof I shall receive quarteridge money and other monies due and payable to the said Corporation, as also two Silver bowls, and one Silver Cup and several other goods belonging to the said Corporation. Now I do hereby promise and undertake to collect, gather and receive all rents, quarteridge, and other monies, during the time I shall so continue in the said office, and pay thereout all such monies, as the Wardens and Commonalty shall order and appoint, and I will on the Friday next after the second day of February, account with, deliver up, and pay unto the then Wardens and Commonalty aforesaid, their successors and assigns, all such money as shall be in arrear and behind on the said account, and also deliver unto the said Wardens the said two Silver bowls and one Silver Cup and other goods belonging to the said Corporation in as good plight and value as the same now are. So help me God, &c."

Another of these loose documents, which is dated 1715, contains the oath of allegiance to the new King (George I.), and the oaths of supremacy and abjuration, the latter intended to guard against the return of the Stuarts. The document, which bears the signatures of all the members of the Company, is as follows:—

"I — do solemnly promise & swear, that I will be faithful & bear true allegiance to his Majesty King George, So help me God.

"I — do swear that I doe from my heart abhor, detest, and abjure as impious and heretical that damnable doctrine & position that princes excommunicated or deprived by the Pope, or any authority of the see of Rome, may be deposed or murthed by their subjects, or any other whatsoever, & I doe declare that no foreign prince, person, prelate, state or potentate, hath or ought to have any jurisdiction, power, superiority, pre-eminence or authority ecclesiastical or spiritual within this realm, so help me God.

"I — do hereby truly and sincerely acknowledge profess certify & declare in my conscience before God and the world, that our Sovereign Lord George is lawful and rightful King of this Realm & of all other his Majesties dominions & countries thereunto belonging & I do solemnly and sincerely declare that I doe believe in my conscience, that the person pretended to be Prince of Wales during the life of the late King James, and since his decease pretending to be & taking upon himself the style & title of King of England by the name of James III. or of Scotland by the name of James VIII., hath not any right or title whatsoever to the Crown of this realm or any other the dominions thereto belonging, & I do renounce refuse & abjure any allegiance or obedience to him & I do swear that I will bear faith & true allegiance to King George & him will defend to the utmost of my power, against all traitorous conspiracies & attempts whatsoever which shall be made against his person, crown or dignity & I will do my utmost endeavour to disclose & make known to his Majesty & his successors all treasons & traitorous conspiracies which I shall know to be against him or any of them; & I do faithfully promise to the utmost of my power to support maintain & defend the succession of the Crown against him the said James & all other persons whatsoever as the same by an Act instituted, an Act for the further limitation of the Crown & the better securing the rights & liberties of the subject; is & stands limited to the Princess Sophia, Electress & Duchess dowager of Hanover & the heirs of her body, being Protestants; and all these things I do plainly & sincerely acknowledge & swear according to these express words by me spoken & according to the plain sense & understanding of the same words without any equivocation, mental evasion or secret reservation whatsoever, And I do make this recognition acknowledgment abjuration, renunciation and promise, heartily, willingly & truly, upon the true faith of a Christian, So help me God.

Jan'y. 12th, 1715. "It is agreed betwixt Mr. Rich. Marsh & the Corporac'on of Taylors, Sarum, that he shall renew a Lease formerly granted to Thos. Clarke, of a Tenement formerly called the Pott & Limbeck situate in a street called Ivy Street w'thin the city of New Sarum, there being nine years and a half to come, if the said Thos. Clarke will agreed to surrender the same to the use of the said Mr. Marsh and the said Corporac'on. And it is further agreed that the said Mr. Marsh shall after the surrender of the said lease, pay to the said Corporac'on £14 or £15 according to the majority of the votes of the house. . . . It is ordered that no Escutchion* for the Wardens shall exceed the price of flour shillings from this day."

June 27th, 1720. "Pd. in acknowledgment for a forgetfull Omission of the Clerk of this Corporac'on in his not attending at the last audit, three shillings & sixpence for the use, pleasure, & satisfaction of the said Corporac'on; (Never to be forgotten.)"

Jan'ry 10th, 1722. "Mr. Benj— Jay by a majority of votes throughout the body of the whole house was disfranchised from serving longer or being a brother of the Corporac'on for, touching his neglect of payment of several Quarteridges in money, pursuant to the customs of the said Corporac'on & contrary to the standing orders & rules thereof; and the said Benj— Jay is hereby disfranchised accordingly."

March 19th, 1723. “Ordered that Mr. John Hall shall have a lease of 31 yeares from the 25th of March next, of the House or Tenement called the Labour in Vain, in Endless Street now in the possession of Edward Ravenor & late of Timothy Edwards.”

April 8th, 1724. “It is unanimously agreed by the whole body of this Corporation that there shall be no feast held this present year on the accustomed days, nor any ringing of Bells, for divers reasons and considerations.”

“City of New Sarum (to wit) at an assembly of the Corporation of Taylors, held at their Common Hall, within the said City, on the 4th December, 1739, present the following 24 members:—Thomas Merrifield, John Wilmot, Wardens; and Richard Triphook, Thomas Best, Richard Seale, Edward Card, Isaac Kirk, Robert Carter, John Wansbrough, James Barlow, Edward Pink, John Cowslade, Thomas Pink, James Green, James Lodger, Robert Newman, Robert Young, James Fairbrother, Richard Triphook, jun., John Kirk, James Brown, William Wansbrough, Thomas Carpenter, and Alexander Corvieston. At this meeting it was agreed that George Ling, a foreigner, upon his paying £5 in money and doing the duties and performing the rules and orders of the Company, and that within 6 months from henceforth, he shall then be admitted a free brother, and not otherwise”; also, “At this assembly James Green was by a vote of this Corporation unanimously disfranchised from being a member and brother thereof, for that he hath not given his attention and attendance at this, or several assembleys last half, and hath not paid his quarteridge money, and for that he was lately found guilty of felony and received sentence of death at an assize held in this City of New Sarum.” John Wilmot and Thomas Pink were chosen Wardens for the following year, and James Fairbrother, Chamberlain; Thomas Carpenter and Alexander Corvieston, Stewards; Robert Young, James Fairbrother, Richard Triphook the younger, John Kirk and Robert Newman, Viewers. And it was ordered that “the Wardens shall on this day and on every future day of the election of officers for this Corporation walk in their gowns to the houses of the new officers.”

At an assembly which was held on February 5th, 1744, the Chamberlain, James Fairbrother, did not appear at the audit of his account, consequently his account could not be settled and adjusted, and "it is agreed that he be and is accordingly fined by a vote of the Company 40s. for several neglects in not attending at several Assembleys, after having been summoned thereto, and also for his several misbehaviours towards the Wardens and Comonalty of this Corporation and for his not attending this morning at an audit to pass his a/cs as he ought to have done." At the next meeting, James Fairbrother produced his accounts, and offered a most humble apology, when the fine was reduced to 7s. 6d., but on January 11th, 1749, he was disfranchised for refusing to accept and serve the office of Steward, and for having lived out of the City one year and one day.

January 7th, 1744—"That as there is now in the Chamberlain's hands 44s. which was lately collected for Capon Money, it is agreed that the same shall be paid at Midsummer next, immediately after dinner of the Midsummer feast towards the expenses thereof, and that the Capon Money shall for ever after be paid unto the Wardens for the time being immediately after their keeping the Midsummer feast, but if the Wardens shall neglect or refuse to keep the feast, the said Capon Money shall be paid to or applied for the use of the Chamber."

September 15th, 1746.—"It is agreed that the Giant, Hobnob and Morris Dancers be made use of, on the next general thanksgiving day, and that a new banner and two new scarves be bought, to be worn as occasion shall offer, and this Corporation may direct; and that the same be bought by direction of the Wardens and the Chamberlain." John Pasby was fined 20s. for not taking the oath and accepting the office of Chamberlain. This fine was reduced to 1s. at the following meeting, upon Pasby giving his bond to accept the office, and to faithfully carry out the duties of the same. "Richard Woodward, who served his apprenticeship with a free brother, having formally challenged his freedom and produced his proof work, was admitted a free brother of the Corporation, he having first taken the usual oaths, and paid the fees, viz., 3s. 4d. to the House, 2s. 6d. to the Clerk, stamps 2s., and Yeoman 6d." "Also Richard Carpenter, son of Joseph Carpenter, a late brother at his own request, is now at liberty to challenge his freedom, paying the usual fees." An order was made "that no strangers are to be introduced or admitted to the next feast, and any Member absent from the feast is to be fined 1s."

April 4th, 1753.—"At this Assembly it is ordered & agreed, that a lease be granted to Ambrose Bampton of the city aforesaid Tanner, for a fine of one & fifty pounds, of all that messuage or tenement with the appurtenances thereunto belonging, near unto the Cross Keys Inne, now in the possession of William Prater . . . under the annual rent of forty shillings and two shillings capon money."*

January 4th, 1757.—At this assembly a lease was granted of a tenement formerly called the Pott and Lymbeck, in Love Lane, and the Company of Glovers and Parchment Makers were granted the use of the Taylors' Hall once a month for a rent of 7s. 6d. per year.

* The above entry refers to the premises 10, Queen Street, now in the occupation of Messrs. Horder. Ambrose Bampton was an Alderman of the City.
On January 3rd, 1758, it was "ordered that a newe Coat, Hatt and stockings be bought for the Yeoman, and that the present Yeoman's Coat be converted into a westcott and a pair of breeches," and £7 12s. 2d. was paid at the next meeting for the Yeoman's clothing. It may be stated that the Yeoman, or beadle, of the Tailors' Guild appeared, upon occasions of festivity or ceremony, in most gorgeous raiment. In addition to a suit of livery and a cocked hat, both of which were heavily decorated with gold lace, he wore silk stockings and buckle shoes. In this imposing costume, and bearing his wand of office, which is now in the Museum, he headed the procession of the Salisbury Corporation of Tailors upon all occasions of public rejoicing.

February 4th, 1763.—"At this Assembly it was agreed that Mr. William Prater (the clerk) shall renew his lease of the house in which he now dwells, at a fine of £10 to hold from St. Thomas' day last, for 40 years, under a quit rent of 40s. per year and 2s. Capon money."

April 6th, 1763.—It was "agreed that there be a dinner and entertainment at the Common Hall at the Thanksgiving Day for Peace, under the direction of the Wardens and Chamberlain, and that the wife of every brother of this Corporation be invited to the said dinner, and that 1s. be given to every widow of the late brothers, and also that the Giant, Hobnob and the Morris dancers be made use of as usual." "Upon the petition of John Young, a foreigner, it is agreed that upon his paying the sum of £5 in money and doeing the duties and performing the rules, orders and customs of the house, that he shall be admitted a free brother, and also paying the usual fees, namely 3s. 4d. to the House, 3s. 4d. to the Wardens, 2s. Steward and 1s. Yeoman.’’ Thomas Taylor, a “foreigner,” was also admitted upon the same terms, and the money received was divided between the old members.

At the election of officers in January, 1768, John Pasby was elected yeoman or beadle, and “It was agreed that there be no salary allowed him for the future, but in lieu thereof 2s. 6d. for and at every meeting of the Corporation and the usual perquisites belonging to the yeoman.” At the same meeting the following leases were granted for 31 years:—A house and garden in Endless Street, to John Minty, Clothier, the fine being £10, also a Tenement on the West side of the porch leading to the Common Hall from Milford Street, and another on the east side of the same passage both to Thomas Smith, and the amount of the fines were divided between the brethren.

13th June, 1770, a lease was granted to Mr. William Stone, “of the corner messuage, backside and garden in love lane, formerly called the Pot and Limbeck, now the Fleur-de-luce, with the appents,” fine £9 14s., 2s. 6d. for the seal and 1s. to the yeoman, and it was agreed to divide the fine amongst the brethren.

January 9th, 1772, “ordered that the Chamberlain shall keep the next twelve-tide feast, but it is agreed by a majority of votes that there shall be no ringing of bells or public feast on the next festival day, it is also agreed that the petition of William Staples, a foreigner, be granted upon his paying £5 to the house.”

During the year 1773 old leases were renewed, or fresh leases granted, in respect of the following properties, i.e., "a tenement and garden on the east side of 'giggon street' to James Goodman, Weaver, fine £6. A Tenement in Trinity street and another occupying the corner in Endless street, fines £6. A Tenement on the east side of a certain street called High St., otherwise Minster St., to George Scandover, Shoomaker, fine £11. Also to Thomas Cooksey of New Sarum, common brewer, of all that messuage formerly called by the sign of the Leg, and the garden thereunto belonging, situate in Minster or High St., for a fine of £21 and the surrender of the old lease. Also to the same Thomas Cooksey a lease of two houses in New St., fine £5 5s. Also to John Henley and George Shergold, of a tenement and garden in Ivy St., near unto a bridge there called 'Blackbridge,' fine £7. And 1 tenement in Blackbridge St., to William Coster, Cooper, fine £10. Also two houses in Endless St., fine £20, and 2 houses in Ivy St., fine £9, and 4 Cottages in Love Lane, fine £6." A portion of this money was divided amongst the members and the other part placed in the chest for the use of the house.

August 10th, 1774.—Charles Surman was enrolled as an apprentice to Thomas Wilmot, a free brother, and William Dodsworth to Richard Carpenter, a free brother. Charles Barlow, an apprentice, who had served his time, formally challenged his freedom and was admitted a free brother on taking the oaths and paying the usual fees. At the same time Thomas Adams, a foreigner, was admitted upon paying £5 and the usual fees.

June, 1784.—"Ordered that Richard Carpenter, one of the brothers, having removed from the City and not having been heard of for two years past and having been advertised for in the General Evening Post and the Salisbury Journal and no intelligence received of him, is declared disfranchised. Ordered that there be a dinner and entertainment at the Common Hall for the next Thanksgiving day for peace and that the wife of every brother of this Company be invited to the dinner, and that the Giant, hobnob and Morris dancers be used as usual.” A lease was granted to Richard Spraggs of a tenement, malt house and kiln house in Love Lane, and also three cottages in Tanner Street—fine £6.

April 6th, 1787.—At this meeting the Common Hall was reported as being greatly out of repair, in the tiling and other parts, and the repairs were ordered to be carried out at a cost not exceeding £10, in accordance with an estimate received from William Dredge, carpenter, and John Young, plasterer. At the following meeting it was reported that other and more important reparations were needed, these being declared as “absolutely necessary, as the building, being much decayed, was in danger of falling down,” and an order was made that the larger repairs should be carried out. On September 3rd, 1788, William Targett challenged his freedom, and was admitted a free brother. On June 7th, 1789, it was ordered that there should be a dinner and procession on the day of thanksgiving for his Majesty’s happy recovery, but the funds of the Chamber being low, the Chamberlain was authorised to borrow money upon interest to pay the expenses connected with the same. Leases were granted of two houses in Gigant Street, one to William Hutchence, clothier, and the other to Robert Woods, baker.
10th September, 1791.—An agreement was made with Thomas Goddard, cutler, to renew his lease for 40 years of a house and backside in a certain street over against the late Guildhall, fine £14 14s., also leases of two houses in High Street, and the money in the chest was divided, 25s. to each brother, and also 42s. to each brother. Francis Young and Richard Goldfinch Brownjohn, foreigners, were admitted as free brothers, each paying £5 and the usual fees.

On February 21st, 1794, a 40 years' lease, granted to William Whitchurch, gentleman, of which 10 years had expired, was renewed for 40 years, of the corner tenement called the Golden Lion, in Endless Street, fine £9 9s. Also a 40-years' lease to Samuel Whitchurch, maltster and common brewer, of a plot of land lying between the Tailors' Hall and the malthouse of Samuel Whitchurch, upon condition that he built certain buildings thereupon and paid a fine of £22 10s. Later on the kitchen and coalhouse were leased to Samuel Whitchurch, quit rent 20s., and 2s. Capon money. The lower, or under hall, pantry, cellar, and part of the garden were leased to John Chubb, quit rent 40s., and 4s. Capon money.

In 1804, as a result of the renewal of a lease, the members received 63s. each, and in 1805 46s. each; in 1806 two amounts were paid to each member, namely 84s. and 66s. In 1808 Charles Surman and John Wilmot were disfranchised for neglecting to attend the assemblies, they having left the City one year and one day, and Thomas Wilmot, "attorney of this City," was elected clerk of the Corporation of Tailors in place of John Young, deceased.
On October 6th, 1809, it was unanimously agreed "that there be a dinner and entertainment in our Common Hall on Wednesday the 25th day of the present month, this being the day appointed for a general thanksgiving and the day upon which his present Majesty King George III. will enter upon the 50th year of his reign; also that the Giant, hobnob, morris dancers and banner be made use of as usual."

At the next annual meeting held on the 10th January, 1810, William Dodsworth, the Chamberlain, presented his account for audit. This account showed that £82 9s. 8d. had been spent in connection with the Jubilee festivities and for interest and there being only £34 14s. 2d. in the chest, a balance of £47 15s. 6d. was owing to the Chamberlain. After receiving this statement, the following resolution was adopted:—

"We the said corporation of Taylors having incurred the extra expence of £47 15s. 6d. on the 25th day of October last, owing to the Jubilee of the 50th Anniversary of his Majesty's Accession appointed by Government, by dressing the Giant and taking him out for public show and other expences attending the same; have this day, assembled in our hall, agreed with one common consent and assent, to pay the said sum of £47 15s. 6d. proportionately, that is to say, to advance and pay the sum of £6 16s. 6d. each in discharge and payment of the £47 15s. 6d. without taking up the same at interest and thereby entailing a great expence on ourselves and our successors; now we hereby agree that the survivors of us, in case either of us departing this life before each of us shall have been paid the said sum of £6 16s. 6d., shall pay or cause to be paid to each of our executors out of the yearly receivings of the said Corporation the sum of £6 16s. 6d."

It may be stated that there were at this time only seven members of the Company left and apparently these survivors did not remain steadfast in their resolve to protect the interests of their successors, as a few months later, viz., on November 5th, 1810, they signed a contract for the sale of houses and stables in Endless Street, this being the first instance of the members of this Corporation agreeing to the absolute sale of any portion of the property of the Guild since their incorporation in the 15th century. The entry in the ledger states that "a contract was signed by all the members of the Corporation, for the sale of two coach-houses, three stables, and two houses in Endless St., for the sum of £315". The resolution authorised each brother to receive £6 16s. 6d., the amount which he had lent to the Company, and after the sum of £15 15s. had been paid to the Chamberlain, the remainder was to be equally divided amongst the seven members.

On July 25th, 1811, the lease of the Golden Lion, Endless Street, was transferred to Samuel Whitchurch, and the fine of £35 which he paid was divided £4 4s. to each member and the balance to the use of the Corporation; and Jonathan Perkins was granted a renewal of a lease, previously held by his wife, late Ann Sewell, of five tenements and five gardens in Tanner Street, the fine of £25 being divided amongst the seven members.

The following extract is of interest, as it displays a better spirit on the part of the seven members, who had sold the property of the Company five years before. The same individuals now resolve to maintain the independence of their Company and to preserve and hand on to their successors the property of the Corporation of which they were the trustees:

February 16th, 1816.—
"In consequence of application having been made to this Corporation to dispose of the fee simple of certain houses and lands thereto belonging, and that by complying therewith a door may be opened to further alienation of land by which the total abolishion of the Corporation may ultimately take place, and the members of the same reflecting with gratitude on the conduct of their predecessors, who have scrupulously and religiously maintained the independence of the said Corporation inviolably through various revolutions that have occurred in the last four hundred years, during which period many institutions similar to this have either by the neglect of its members and stimulated by mercenary motives have sunk into oblivion. The present members of this Corporation feeling the consequence and respect attached to so ancient an institution, and humbly hoping the same aided by divine providence under our present happy constitution may continue to flourish, are induced by their high veneration of the same to enter into the following protest. We do hereby protest against the sale of the fee of any houses or lands belonging to this Corporation, and hereby most solemnly promise and declare and engage for ourselves, that we never will, nor will any or either of us ever at any time or times hereafter, consent to alienate any part thereof, and we do also in the strongest terms recommend, desire and enjoin all and every of our future brothers and sisters of our Guild, fraternity, or Corporation most strictly to conform to this our determination and final resolution, so recorded in our book of records, in testimony whereof we have in solemn assembly hereunto set our hands, and we further request that the same be read every year on the audit day, and at the admission of every new member.

Signed—

William Dodsworth, William Targett,
John Warn, Joseph Adams, William Brownjohn, William Targett, Junr., Thomas Luke.”

The document also contains the signatures of John C. Munday, a foreigner (stranger), who was admitted a free brother in July, 1829, upon payment of £85, and of Thomas Lawes Adams, who in 1835 successfully claimed his freedom, as an apprentice of a brother, and as a son of a brother, the latter being admitted upon payment of 3s. 4d. to the chamber, 2s. 6d. clerk, 2s. stamp, and 6d. yeoman.
For thirty years the above excellent resolution was maintained, that is as far as the actual sale of any of the houses or lands of the Corporation was concerned, and it was not until 1846 that we find any further sale of property, but the members do not appear to have made the slightest effort to preserve the income of the Company (which at this time had become very considerable) for legitimate Guild purposes. On the contrary, the income from rents, fees, and fines was divided amongst the few surviving members as fast as it was received. Their aim appears to have been to keep the number of their members as small as possible, with the result that the share of the income received by each member became of such value that the next foreigner (John C. Munday) who succeeded in obtaining admission to the Company was obliged to pay an entrance fee of £85, instead of the £5 fee which had always before been charged for the enrolment of a stranger. At the next meeting (August, 1829) the proceeds of a lease of a house in Blackbridge Street (the present Trinity Street), and the £85 received from John C. Munday, were divided, each member receiving £20.

During the next two years leases of the following properties were renewed:

"To John Murch of Honiton, two tenements in Ivy St., fine £10., and a quit rent of 26s. 8d. and one couple of fat Capons yearly."

"To Thomas Cutler, one house over against the late old Guildhall, fine £26, quit rent 40s. and a couple of Capons yearly."

"To James Salton, three houses in Love Lane, fine £24, quit rent 20s. and a couple of Capons yearly."

"To John Salton, three houses in Ivy St., fine £14, quit rent 20s. and two couple of capons yearly."
"To Charles Cusse, Innkeeper, a corner house in Love Lane, called the Bird-in-hand, late the Fleur-de-lis, late the Pott and Lymbeck, fine £25, quit rent 20s. and a couple of Capons."

"To Samuel Whitchurch, buildings at the back of the Tailors Hall, fine £31 10s., quit rent £2 13s. 4d. and four couple of fat capons yearly."

In each case the money received was divided between the members, except some small portion which was paid to the Chamberlain for the common fund of the Company.

Again, in March, 1832, Robert Batt, ironmonger, was granted a lease of the house "known by the sign of the Leg, and a garden, both in Minster or High St., with a back gate in New St., together with 3 cottages on the north side of New St., at a quit rent of £5 and three couple of fat capons yearly." The "Leg" referred to is the property now used as a Confectioner's and Temperance Hotel, three doors from the Old George Hotel. The fine paid by Robert Batt for this lease was £58, and this money was at once divided, each of the seven members receiving £8 5s., leaving only 5s. to go to the Chamberlain's account, which was so impoverished, that some three months later, as will be seen by the following extract from the Ledger, the Company was obliged to plead poverty as an excuse for not taking part in the local celebration of the passing of the Reform Bill.

"June 15th, 1832.—At a meeting held to consider the propriety of attending the procession, with the Giant, &c., on Wednesday the 27th, this being the day appointed for the celebration of the passing of the Reform Bill. After consideration, it was resolved that the present state of the funds will not admit of the great expenditure consequent on such procession, but a deputation of gentlemen from the Committee formed in the city to superintend the festival, having attended his meeting, who asked, that in the event of the Tailors not joining the procession, that the Giant, hobnob, banners, and other paraphernalia usually paraded therewith might be entrusted to them for exhibition; it was resolved that such request be complied with, and that the Giant, hobnob, banners, &c., be delivered into the charge of the Committee for exhibition on the 27th, upon the condition that Mr. R. Squarey and Mr. Sparshott do sign an undertaking on behalf of the Committee, to redeliver the same into the hands of the Tailors' Guild, on the morning of the 28th, safe and uninjured."

Notwithstanding this impoverishment of the Common Fund, in June, 1832, it appears that in the following September, when the Company granted a lease of nine houses in Love Lane to Stephen Hayter, of Higher End Farm, Hale, yeoman, and received £118, the amount of the fine, the whole of this sum with the exception of 1s., was divided amongst the seven members.

On February 19th, 1834, a lease was granted to John Munday, tailor, one of the Wardens of the Company, of a shop in Queen Street, at a rent of £40, and a couple of fat capons yearly, the fine of £35 being divided amongst the seven members. This is the house occupied by Messrs. Horder in Queen Street. On May 17th, 1837, the minutes record the death of two members, viz., Joseph Adams and John Munday, and the election as a free brother of Alfred Munday, son of John Munday, the number of members now being six. In January, 1842, William Targett, senior, died, and Thomas Luke, who had left the City was disfranchised, and in 1846 the four remaining members sold the reversion of several properties, including the house in High Street, "known as the Leg"; and at the same time the silver cups and bowls were divided amongst the members. In 1854 the Ledger contains a report of the sale to John Clark "of the corner Messuage in Love Lane, now converted into a Malthouse, but formerly known as the Bird-in-hand, late Fleur-de-lis, late Pott and Lymbeck."

In the year 1862 the Tailors' Hall was rented by the Rector of Sarum St. Edmund's (the Rev. T. H. Tooke), and divine service was held there for the people of St. Edmund's, whilst reparations were carried out at their Parish Church.

Of the four members of the Company, Alfred William Munday died in October, 1876, and William Targett in the following May. On May 26th, 1880, the two surviving members, Edwin John Targett (chamberlain) and Thomas Lawes Adams (steward), sealed a deed of feoffment, conveying the reversion of the last property of the Guild. The final entry in the No. 7 Ledger is as follows:—"The above feoffment disposes of all the property of the Corporation, and its effect is to render the Corporation defunct."

In conclusion, it may be of interest to state that the Tailors' Hall, which was built in 1524, was situated behind the buildings at the corner of Milford Street and Pennyfarthing Street, in the Chequer known as Swayne's Chequer during the XVI. and XVII. centuries and later on as the Ship Chequer. The approach to the Hall was through a long passage leading from Milford Street. On one side of this passage there were six cottages, which were built soon after the Hall was erected. These tenements, which were the property of the Guild, stood with their backs to the Crystal Fountain Inn. The ground floor of the Tailors' Hall consisted of the lower hall, kitchen, pantry, cellar, coalhouse, and other offices, with a garden at the back.
CARVED OAK SHIELDS.

From the Tailors’ Hall. (Salisbury Museum).
The large hall in which the Assemblies and feasts of the Corporation of Tailors were held occupied the whole of the upper floor. This room, which is now used as a store, and in a very dilapidated condition, was lighted by three windows, which were originally filled with 15th century stained glass, and there are two portions of one of these windows still preserved in the Salisbury Museum. One of these exhibits the Madonna and Child, and the other contains a representation of St. Christopher and the Divine Infant. The walls of this upper Hall were covered with oak panelling, six feet high from the floor, and on three sides of the room there were seats for the members, consisting of fixed oak benches. The remains of some of these seats and a portion of the panelling are still in position, although much damaged.

A large number of carved oak shields were arranged along the top of the panelling, and each of these shields bore either the name or the initials of one of the members, and also the date upon which he had been appointed a warden of the Corporation.

On January 12th, 1715, it was ordered that "no Escutcheon for the wardens shall exceed the price of four shillings from this day."

In the year 1884 there were 25 shields remaining in the Hall, and the following is a copy of a list of these which was taken at that time. The 15 which are first enumerated are at present in the Salisbury Museum, and the remaining 10 were disposed of to various persons who were interested in the past members, whose names or initials were recorded upon the shields:

The interesting carved oak chair, which for so many years stood in the Upper Hall for the use of the Master of the Guild, has been lost sight of, but we are fortunate in having the portrait of William Gillow, who was made a free brother in 1637, and who, during the following 20 years, continually occupied some official position in the Corporation, including those of Steward, Chamberlain, Junior Warden, and Senior Warden. He died whilst holding the latter position in 1658. As before stated, this interesting portrait, which depicts William Gillow in the Puritan dress of the Commonwealth period, and which for over 200 years adorned the walls of the Tailors' Hall, was presented to the City Corporation by Dr. H. P. Blackmore in 1906. The Salisbury Museum contains many other interesting relics from this Hall, including the Giant, the Giant's two-handled sword and his mace, the Hobnob, or Hobby-horse, also the two small fragments of the ancient windows in 15th century coloured glass, before alluded to, the staff of the yeoman or beadle, which is tipped with a representation of Agnus Dei, the emblem of St. John the Baptist, the patron saint of the Fraternity of Tailors, and a large framed panel bearing the arms of the Salisbury Corporation of Tailors*, viz—: (Argent) a royal tent between two parliament- robes (gules) lined ermine. the tent garnished of the last. tentstaff (proper).

On a chief (azure) a lion passant guardant (or).

Crest: on a wreath azure and argent, a lamb passant (argent) within a glory (or).

Supporters: two camels of the last.

Motto: Concordia parvæ res crescut . 1633.

The ancient oak chest was given by Mr. Arthur Whitehead to the Rector and Churchwardens of St. Martin's Church, Salisbury, and is at present in the choir of that Church.

CHAPTER XIII.

THE SHOEMAKERS.

This Fraternity, "Sutor Currios" (shoemakers and curriers), is included in the first list of Craft Guilds which appears in the Corporation Ledger A (1440). Like all the other Craft Guilds in Salisbury, with the exception of the Tailors, and possibly the Weavers also, the Shoemakers' Guild existed without a licence from the King; the members were voluntarily associated together as a mystery, their object being to encourage and regulate the trades connected with the leather industry, and included the flaying, tanning, and currying of hides; and also the manufacture and sale of boots, shoes, and other articles of leather.

In later years the Fraternity appears in the Ledger as "Allutarii" (cordwainers). In 1475 the "Schomakers" were one of the Guilds which supplied men and money for the use of the King (Edward IV.) for his expedition to France.

In common with all other Craft Guilds, that of the Shoemakers was probably re-organised during the reign of Elizabeth as a trade company, but the records of the Corporation contain very little information respecting it during the XVI. century. After the City had received its Charter of Incorporation from James I., the Shoemakers obtained new constitutions from the Mayor and Corporation, under which the Company included shoemakers, curriers, and last-makers.

The following extracts from these orders may be of interest, as they throw some light on the customs of the trade at that time:—

"Civitas Novæ Sarum. During the XV. century a shoemaker worked on new leather, and was not under any circumstances permitted to repair old boots or shoes; on the other hand, a cobbler was one who worked on old leather, and was not allowed to make boots or shoes. Order No. 26 appears to show that this strict rule had fallen into desuetude in 1613.

In 1624 the Mayor and Corporation made the following order for the shoemakers:

An order not to keep twoe shopps. Att this Councell it is ordered, that noe free brother or free sister of the Company of Shoemakers w’th in this Citty of Newe Sarum shall att any tyme hereafter either by him or her self on any other for him or her keepe or have twoe shopps or places w’th in this Citty to utter or sell wares in (excepte itt in the tymes of ffaires w’th in this Citty) upon paine that every delinquent shall for every tyme that he or she shall offend against this order, forfeite and loose to th’use of the Company for every day twoe shillings."

The Corporation Ledger shows how strict was the control exercised over the Trade Companies by the City Council. On September 27th, 1632, the Corporation ordered that the Company of Shoemakers should be dissolved because their Wardens, John Pearce and Thomas Staples, had received drink and a fee of 20s. from William Baker, plumber, an improper person, and had admitted him into their Company. The members of the Company presented a humble petition to the Corporation acknowledging the fault of their Wardens, and begging to be restored. Their request was granted, and they were again licensed and appointed a Company, to be called the Company of Shoemakers, Curriers and Last-Makers, and were to have similar orders and constitutions to those which they had previously possessed.

On May 21st, 1634, the Corporation Ledger contains the following order respecting the Shoemakers' Company:

"At this Counsell yt is ordered that noe schooemaker inhabyting or dwellinge within this citty shall at anyetyme hereafter buye or by anye other wayes or meanes gett or p'cure into his hands or possession anye bootes, shooes or pantuffles whch shallbe wrought or made out of this citty, to the intent to sell vent or utter them within this citty upon payne to forfeyte and loose fyme shillings for everye payre of bootes, and twoe shillings for everye payre of shooes or pantuffles whch shallbe gotton p'cured, sould, or uttered contrarye to this order, th'one moytie of whch forfe ytures shallbe to the vse of the Companye of schooemakers of this citty, an thother moytie to thuse of the poore of the said citty."

The Searchers and Viewers were also ordered to search the wares of every free brother and free sister, and to try all black and red tanned leather and all new shoes that should be exposed for sale.

The Mayor and Corporation revoked the orders of all the Companies in the City during the year 1674, and they were reconstituted in the following year. Under the orders then granted to the Shoemakers, the Company included shoemakers, curriers, last-makers, tanners, coach-makers, bridle cutters, and flaxdressers.

In 1697, in answer to a petition from the Wardens and brethren of the Shoemakers' Company, the Corporation ordered "That a letter of Attorney be made and delivered to empower the Wardens of the Shoemakers to sue for penalties for breach of the orders of the Company which were granted on 18th October, 1675."

The Shoemakers' Company appear to have taken a part in the processions and festivities that were held in Salisbury in 1750, in 1784, and again in 1814, but from 1784 their numbers declined. From this date, and probably earlier, the Companies were obliged to abandon the attempt to regulate an expanding industry on Guild principles, and by the end of the century the interests of the manual workers had passed, with few exceptions, from the hands of the Companies to that of the Trade Union and the new Friendly Societies.

The Friendly Society of Cordwainers of England was instituted in 1784, and the Salisbury Shoemakers became affiliated to the larger organisation soon after it was established. The author has in his possession a card of membership of this Society. The card is printed from a copper-plate designed by "Carpenter, Aldgate High Street," which depicts the Arms of the Cordwainers, supported on either side by figures, the one holding a boot and the other a shoe. The inscriptions above the figures are, "Unite to maintain our rights inviolate," and "Prosperity attend ye justness of our cause." Below the Arms of the Society appears within a scroll,
"The Friendly Society of Cordwainers of England, Instituted the 15 of November, 1784."

The following is written on the back of the card:—"2nd Quarter 31 August 1785. Or. 29: This is to certify that Jas. Yeates is a Legal Man and a Member of the old Rainbow Society Salisbury. Age 24 years, Height 5ft. 2½in., complexion Brown, Womans Man. Signed, Carter, President."

The term "Womans Man" probably certified that Jas. Yeates was qualified to make boots and shoes for women only.*

The Hall of the Shoemakers' Company was at the back of the Crispin Inn (now known as the Pheasant) and other tenements adjoining in Rollestone Street, with an entrance to the Hall through the Court-yard of the Crispin in Hog Lane (now Salt Lane). This property originally belonged to Phillip Crew, a schoolmaster, who was the son of a shoemaker. Phillip Crew, who had served the office of Churchwarden of St. Edmund's in 1618—19, died in 1638, and left his dwelling house, which heretofore had been two tenements, his orchard and garden, together with his silver plate and furniture, and (after the death of his servant) an adjoining tenement in Rollestone Street, to the Company of Shoemakers. He desired them to enlarge the house and provide a hall for the Company, towards which he gave them also the "sawed bordes" in his "shoppe."

A copy of the last will of Phillip Crew is included in the deeds belonging to this old property, and is as follows:—

A true copie of the Clause of the last Will & Testament of Phillip Crewe deceased concerning the gifts to the Company of Shoomakers within the Cittie of Newe Sarum.

The deeds of this property show that soon after the Company had acquired the freehold they erected a new building in the garden at the back of Crew’s house. The lower part of this building (now used as stores and stables) is described in the deeds as the buttery, above which was the large room or hall, the approach to this room being by a wide staircase from the Court yard in Hog Lane. The feoffees in trust of the lands and tenements of the Company at this time were Richard Mason, Thomas Staples, and Joseph Mitchell.

On 29th December, 1677, the feoffees, viz., Thomas Willis, Thomas Staples, Thomas Crooke, James Dyatt, Nathaniel Laidsege (? Leversage), John Garrett and Robert Hill, purchased on behalf of the Company two tenements in Hog Lane adjoining their other property, from Thomas Ray, of Ford, merchant, and John Saint Barbe,* of the Close, New Sarum, gentleman.

This constituted the whole of the property of the Company, viz., five tenements; Crew’s House (originally two), a tenement in Rollestone Street, the hall and buttery, and the two houses in Hog Lane, referred to in the deeds as Ray’s land and Saint Barbe’s land.

The list of assessments for a Royal Aid and Supply in 1667 shows “Land of ye Shoemakers, 5 Tenements in Mr. Parsons’ Chequer.”

The date when Crew’s old residence became the Crispin Inn is doubtful, but in a lease of one of the tenements granted in 1772 the name of Daniel Payson, of New Sarum, maltster and brewer, appears as one of the feoffees for the Company, together with the names of six other persons, all of whom were either curriers or shoemakers. About 1780–90 an arrangement was entered into whereby the Clothworkers’ Company was granted the use of the Shoemakers’ Hall for their assemblies, and apparently soon after 1800 the Methodists had the use of this hall for their Sunday School.

On 27th December, 1810, John Cooke, George Hacker, Francis Wills, James Sutton, Alexander Wills, Richard Sopp, Thomas Wilmot, Richard Callow, Edward Skelton and Walter Aslatt all members and feoffees in trust for the Company of Shoemakers, granted a lease of their Hall to James Trowbridge, carpenter, for 40 years (fine £40), and subject to the rent, covenants and conditions reserved, they “demise to farm letten their Hall and premises with the appurtenances in Hog Lane late in the possession of the Trustees of the Sunday School of the Methodist Chapel, but now of William Thick. And all ways, paths, passages, waters, watercourses, lights," &c., &c., "to the said Hall. Saving and reserving to the said Company of Shoemakers, and also to the Company of Clothworkers, the use of the Hall at all times to hold their meetings for public business only, with free ingress and egress to and from the same."

On June 24th, 1813, the same feoffees granted a lease of the messuage, tenement and garden in Hog Lane, and also that little tenement and garden in the same (Ray's and Saint Barbe's lands), together with all that cellar and buttery with the appurtenances, being within the Court of the Hall of the same Company, to James Trowbridge, carpenter (fine £21 15s. 0d., annual rent 22s. 1d.).

1820, May 30—31. By lease and release of these dates between John Cooke, of N.S., shoemaker, and James Sutton, of the same place, gentleman (the surviving feoffees in trust for the Company of Shoemakers of the first part, Alexander Wills, shoemaker; Richard Sopp, currier; Thomas Wilmot, gentleman; Edward Skelton, appraiser; William Walker, innkeeper; and John Warren, brewer, of the second part, and Samuel Foot of the third part, in consideration, &c., &c., have bargained and confirmed unto the said Samuel Foot "all that tenement and Public House called the Crispin in or near to certain streets called Hog Lane and Rollestone Street, with the shop and premises thereunto belonging, And also all that Hall commonly called Crew's Hall adjoining the said Public House called the Crispin, and all that cellar and Buttery situate within the Court of the said Hall, together with a right of way in common with the adjoining property heretofore belonging to the Company through the yard to the passage adjoining the east river or channel, &c., &c., all which premises are parcels of lands called Crew's lands, &c., &c. Except never the less out of this grant and release, the use by the Company of Shoemakers of the Hall called Crew's Hall for the purposes of holding assemblies and transacting the business of the Company at all reasonable times whilst the same remains in its present state, and to the like use of some other convenient room in the said Public House called the Crispin after the said Hall shall be altered or pulled down at all times whilst the said Company shall subsist and have any business to transact with free liberty of ingress and egress into the said Hall or room respectively," &c., &c.

By provisions of lease and release between the same parties and on the same date, the tenements in Hog Lane, known by the name of Ray's and Saint Barbe's lands, were disposed of.

In 1821 Crew's Hall was let to a cabinet maker (Joseph Vidler), with the right of entrance through the yard of the premises "heretofore called the Crispin, but now known by the name and sign of the Pheasant"; and in March, 1828, the whole of the property was sold by Samuel Foot to George Pain, brewer and maltster. From this time the Salisbury shoemakers, as members of the Rainbow Club, which was a branch of the Friendly Society of Cordwainers of England, held their Club meetings at the Rainbow Inn (now William the Fourth), in Milford Street, and we hear no more of the Shoemakers' Company.
The Crispin Inn appears in the old books of the Salisbury (St. Edmund's) Overseers as the Crispin and Crispinian. St. Crispin was the patron saint of the Shoemaking Fraternity, and October 25th was dedicated in the calendar to St. Crispin, of the third century, with whom in ancient times was associated St. Crispinian or Crispianus, and this day used to be observed as a holiday by workers in the trade of shoemaking. Crispin and Crispinian are supposed to have been converts to Christianity in Rome, and to have gone out on a mission to Gaul, as France was then called. Though of gentle birth, they wrought at the humble trade of making shoes, to avoid being chargeable to others for their maintenance. Their exemplary conduct, and the influence over men shown by the converts they made, caused enemies of the new religion to persecute them, and eventually they were beheaded by order of the Governor (Rictionvarus), and later on were canonised.

Shakspeare has immortalized Crispin by the speech he has given to Henry V. before the battle of Agincourt—

"This day is call'd the feast of Crispian;
He that out-lives this day, and comes safe home,
Will stand a tip-toe when this day is nam'd,
And rouze him at the name of Crispian;
He that shall live this day, and see old age,
Will yearly on the vigil feast his neighbours,
And say, to-morrow is Saint Crispian.
Then will he strip his sleeve, and shew his scars;
Old men forget; yet shall not all forget,
But they'll remember, with advantages,
What feats they did that day.
Then shall our names,
Familiar in their mouths as household words—
Harry the King, Bedford and Exeter, Warwick and Talbot, Salisbury and Gloster,
Be in their flowing cups freshly remembered.
This story shall the good man teach his son;
And Crispin Crispian shall ne'er go by,
From this day to the ending of the world,
But we in it shall be remembered;
We few, we happy few, we band of brothers;
For he to-day that sheds his blood with me,
Shall be my brother; be he ne'er so vile,
This day shall gentle his condition;
And gentlemen in England, now abed,
Shall think themselves accursed they were not here,
And hold their manhoods cheap while any speaks
That fought with us upon Saint Crispian's day."

There is a picture of Phillip Crew in the Council House, Salisbury.* This interesting old portrait was found in a cupboard in one of the store rooms at the Municipal Offices in 1895. The oak panel (74in. by 32in.) upon which it is painted was cracked and in a bad state, and very little of the picture was discernible. The picture has, however, been restored, and Phillip Crew may now be seen standing with a staff in his hand, wearing a loose coat or tunic with a girdle, breeches and stockings, and large buckle shoes. He is clothed also in a large black robe, and wears on his head a Flemish beaver hat with a wide brim. The picture bears the following inscription, which has been carefully restored:—"Hæredes isti quoties succeditis aulæ fraternus vestris mentibus adsit amor," which translated is, "My heirs, as often as you succeed to this Hall, let brotherly love be present in your minds." On the back of the panel is painted the following:—"W.R. T.M., Wardens; T.S., Chambn. 1638." Below in modern letters is, "A. Wills and R. Sopp, Wardns.; J. Adams, Chambn. 1803."

* Vide illustration page 220.
The portraits of two other benefactors of the Shoemakers' Company are also in the Council House; one, that of William Windover, bears upon the canvas the following inscription:—

"Mr. William Windover, borne in Newe Sarum, deceased ye xxxi. of January 1632, hath geven unto our companie of Shoomakers ye some of fifty pounds. His soule restteth with God for ever. Amen." Below are the names of the Wardens and the Chamberlain of the Company:—

"William Spearing and John Sherston, Wardens; Ralph Pasby, Chamberleyne."

The frame of the other picture bears the following words:—"The Effigies of Lawrence Tippot borne in this Citty, died 1675, wch gave to the Soc'y of Shoomakers in Sarum fifty pounds æta 52." The canvas also bears the following names:—"Thomas Staples, John Rudwell, Wardens; William Jordon, Nicholas Staples, Chambns. 1679."

There is also to be seen in the Salisbury Museum a drinking cup in the shape of a shoe, which came from the Shoemakers' Hall. This cup is made from leather, but lined with some non-absorbent composition. On the front of the shoe appears a silver shield bearing the arms of the Cordwainers, and a silver band, which protects the rim of the shoe, has inscribed upon it, "John Gumbleton ex dono." There is also a fine Malacca cane, with the handle bound with a rim of leather. On the end of this cane there is a long brass ferrule 6½ in. long which was made to fit into the shoe to allow of its being carried in procession as the emblem of the Company of Shoemakers.
CHAPTER XIV.

SEARCHERS, VIEWERS AND SEALERS.

To prevent fraud, either in false weights and measures, defective material and tricks of trade, and to secure a high standard of work, most of the old Guilds had been accustomed to appoint two or more of their number as searchers, viewers, and sealers. The duty of these officials was to visit the homes and workshops of the Guild brethren, and there to examine both the work of the craftsman and the quality of the material he was working upon, and if either was considered bad, the delinquent was tried before the Magistrates and a special jury, which consisted of men belonging to the same trade, but not of the same kin as the accused. If found guilty the culprit had to forfeit the defective article. After the re-organisation of the Trade Companies in 1612, the new orders and constitutions granted by the Corporation ordained that each Company should select and nominate these important officials, but that the appointment should be made by the City Magistrates, before whom they were sworn in open Court. The oath taken by searchers and sealers of leather was as follows:—“You shall sweare that you well and truly shall doe your office in searchinge and sealinge leather, that it be well and sufficiently tanned, and that beinge sufficiently tanned you doe thereupon sett the seale for that purpose to you committed and appointed. And this you and every of you shall doe faithfully, truely and without favor or affeccon. So help you God.” Amongst the many interesting books in the Muniment Room there is one which is marked “Searchers, Viewers and Sealers.” This book contains the nominations and appointments of these officials of the companies, and also the reports or minutes of the various cases which were taken by them before the Magistrates. The subjoined extracts from this book may be of interest:—

“May 24, 1624. We ye Wardens of ye Shoomakers Company doe return Joseph Batchelor and William Blake to be sworn sealers of tanned leather, hides and skins, and searchers of raw hides and skins. Signed William Forty, Christopher Dupe.”

The next entry in this book appears to be a report made by the sealers or searchers of raw hides against four men for cutting hides in flaying, and the 20d. entered against each name probably represents the fine inflicted upon the workmen for what was considered an offence against good workmanship. The following is the entry in the book:—

"A note of ye hides gasht and cutt in flaying

And that if you finde any such unwholsome Victualls you make due presentment and certify the same to Mr. Mayor or his deputy without any favor or affecion, soe helpe you God."

The next extracts relate to the dealers in coal (principally charcoal from the New Forest). There were only six coal dealers licensed for the City, and those appointed received an official chain and badge from the Corporation, which they were required to wear when selling coal. There are four sets of brass chains and badges, at present in the Municipal Offices, but these are of a later date; the badge is a shield bearing the arms of the city, charged upon a double-headed eagle, with an inscription on the back "N. Still, Mayor 1782."

CHAPTER XV.

THE BAKERS AND THE COOKS.

Mention of these crafts appears in the Salisbury Corporation records as early as the beginning of the XV. century; the bakers, "Pistores," as one fraternity, the wardens being William Colyn and William Swengil. The cooks, "Coci" (Coqui), were included with the Barber Surgeons, "Barbitons(ores)," in another Guild, the wardens being Nich(ola)us Wedgrove and Thomas Hurde. The ancient ledgers show that both Guilds provided each their quota of men and money for the King's service in 1440, 1475, and on many subsequent occasions. The history of both fraternities is very obscure during the XV. and XVI. centuries. They appear to have made offerings at St. Edmund's Church upon their Guild festivals, but there are very few references to either of them in the records of the Corporation. At this period the leading features of their rules and regulations probably resembled those of the London Bakers' Guild, respecting which some interesting information is to be found in "The White Book" of the City of London ("Liber Albus"). Among the ordinances that were compiled for this Guild about the year 1400 is the following:—"Two loaves shall be made for one penny, and four loaves for one penny; and no loaf shall be baked from bran. And that no baker shall sell bread before his oven but only in the market of his Lordship the King. And if anyone is found selling in his house, he shall be amerced in the sum of xls. And that no one shall buy such bread under pain of losing the loaf. And that each baker shall have his own seal, as well for brown bread as for white bread, that so it may be better known whose bread it is.” . . .

“And no baker of white bread shall make tourte (brown) bread, and no one who makes tourte shall make white bread. And that no baker shall buy corn to sell again. And that no baker who makes tourte bread shall sell his flour to cooks for pastry.” Under these ordinances a baker was not allowed to give the “regratess” (the woman who retailed bread from house to house) the “handsel money” of sixpence on Monday, or the “curtesy money” of threepence on Friday, but instead he was bound to give her thirteen loaves for the price of twelve.

In January, 1554, the Mayor and Corporation of Salisbury made an order that all common bakers dwelling within the City should grind their wheat and other grain at the Mills within the City, called the Bishop’s Mills. After the City had received its Charter of Incorporation from James I., the whole of the Companies (except the Tailors and the Weavers, both of which were corporations under Royal Charters) received new constitutions from the Mayor and Commonalty. The orders of the Bakers and the Cooks, as one Company, were sealed in 1613, but in 1620, owing to a dispute, these orders were revoked, and the Cooks were constituted a separate Company. Their officials, consisting of a Warden, a Chamberlain, a Steward, a Clerk and a Yeoman, were to be chosen on the Wednesday before Whitsuntide, their feast being held on Midsummer Day. Amongst their privileges was the sole right to make cakes and sweet bread, except on certain occasions. The Bakers’ Company, as re-constituted in 1622 were to elect their officials on the Tuesday in Easter Week, consisting of two Wardens, one Chamberlain, one Steward, a Clerk, and a Yeoman, their feast to be held on the Wednesday before the feast of St. Matthew. In the new orders granted to the bakers in 1622, the bakers were prohibited from making other than plain bread, except for Good Friday and Christmas, and for funerals. The order reads as follows:—“No free brother, or free sister, shall at any time hereafter make, utter or sell bread, made with butter or milk, spice cakes, buns, biscuits or other spice bread, being bread out of assize, except it be before spoken* for funerals, or upon the Friday before Easter, or at Christmas, upon pain to forfeit for every default 10/-.

And no free brother or sister shall at any time hereafter, sell or utter but three loaves of horse-bread† for a penny, and thirteen to the dozen, and those loaves to be made according to the assize, upon penalty of 10/- for each offence.

No free brother, or free sister, shall sell bread in the Market upon pain to forfeit 10/- for each offence, and no free brother, or free sister, shall hereafter lend any money to any innholder or victualler, to the intent or purpose to get his or their custom, upon penalty of three pounds for each offence.”

In 1635 the Corporation Ledger contains the following entry respecting the Bakers’ Company:—

“Upon the humble petition of the Companye of Bakers of this Cittey now exhibited, yt is ordered, That such of the bretheren or sisters of the Company of bakers within the Cittey as shall at any tyme hereafter by any color, shifte, or manner...

*Bespooken, or ordered beforehand.

† Horse loaves, a kind of bread formerly given to horses. It was anciently a common phrase to say that a diminutive person was no higher than three horse loaves (Halliwell’s Dictionary of Archaic and Provincial Words).
whatsoever sell, geve, or utter above thirteen pennye-worth of breade to the dozen shall not have the loane or benefitte of any of the moneye or stocke of the sayde Companye for the year next following. And if anye p'son shal a second tyme offend therein then suche p'son shall be utterlye barred and disabled from having the loane or benefitte of anye such money or stockes of the sayde Companye for all tymes hereafter."

It may be explained that it was the custom for each Company to grant loans from the common chest to such of its members as required assistance, and the members once a year received a report from their officials as to the state of the chest. When the chest was well supplied, and money had accumulated, an order was usually made that a certain portion of their stock—generally one half—should be taken out of the chest and divided amongst the members.

In 1637 the viewers were ordered to try all bread once a month at least. This power of searching for defective bread continued until the end of the XVIII. century.

Respecting the assize of bread, to which reference has been made, it may be stated that from the XIII. century the State, by enactment, regulated the price of bread, ale and fuel, to prevent fraud in weight and adulteration. This system was continued down to the early part of the XIX. century, and very strict regulations were made for the guidance of those whose duty it was to make the assize. The assize, which was governed by the price of wheat, appears to have been changed every few months in Salisbury during the XV. century, but the agreement that was made early in the preceding century (1306) between the Bishop, Simon de Gandavo, and the Commonalty of Salisbury (a copy of which is in the Corporation Muniment Room) contains an article that “An assize of bread shall be given in each week by the Mayor and the Bishop’s Bailiff, both being present.”

From an interesting old work, “Artachthos, or a New Booke declaring the Assize or weight of Bread, and containing divers orders set forth by His Ma’ties most honble Privie Councell,” by John Penkethman (London, 1638), we learn that in the IVth year of Henry VIII. the Privy Council ordered “That the bakers shall make and bake to be sold, farthing white bread, half-penny white, penny white; half-penny wheaten, penny wheaten; penny household, and two-penny household; and none of greater size, upon paine of forfeiteinge all such greater bread to bee distributed amongst poore people, the time of Christmas always excepted.”

In the VIIIth year of the same reign, by command of the Privy Council, “A Tryall was made of a quarter of wheat, viz., two parts thereof into wheaten bread, one part into white bread, and the fourth part into household bread.”

In the 31st year of Edward I. the assize or weight of bread was ordained not to be changed, but by the increase or decrease of sixpence in the price of a quarter of wheat in the Market, so that the price of wheat rising or falling sixpence in the quarter, the assize or weight of bread would be diminished or augmented accordingly. The assize was determined by the market value of the quarter of wheat plus the authorised allowance for the baker’s expenses and profit, e.g., by the statute of the assize, 51 Hen. III. (1266), when wheat was xii d. the quarter, the baker was allowed—

Consequently the baker was obliged to arrange the weight of his loaves so that the bread which he made from a quarter of wheat should be sold for a sum not exceeding 18\(\frac{1}{4}\) d.

In the time of Edward I., “as it seemeth, and as the olde booke of assize (which hath relation to the statute of Winchester) declareth,” the baker was allowed—

June, 1592 (34th Elizth), "It was presented by a Jury neere London before the Clerke of the Market of her Maiesties household, that the best wheat was 21s. 4d., the second at 18s. 8d., and the third at 16s. the quarter; and that the bakers should have allowed unto them for the baking of a quarter of wheat in and neere about London 6s. 10d., which was then allowed by the said Clerke of the Market to be so, in regarde to the great charges and prices of every thing, w'ch was the much more than in former times, the said allowance being made as followeth, viz.:

This allowance was afterwards reduced to 6s. to every baker inhabiting any city or corporate town where white, wheaten, and household bread was baked and sold, "the rather in respect of their greate charges, and bearing of scot and lot upon all impositions." Bakers not living in a city or corporate town, or inhabiting a city or corporate town in which only white and household bread was made, "shalle have 4s. in allowance and no more."

The official measure, a bronze Winchester bushel, which was sent to Salisbury soon after the accession of Henry VII. (1485) is now to be seen in the Salisbury Museum, where it was deposited by the Corporation in 1865, together with the wooden sub-divisions of it. This bronze measure, which stands on three legs, is 10 inches high and 19\(\frac{1}{2}\) inches in diameter. Running round the outer surface is the following:—HENRICUS . SEPTIMUS . DEI . GRA(REX)CIA . REX . HANGLIE . ET . FRANCIE. Also a Tudor rose, crowned, a portcullis and a white greyhound, the three badges of Henry VII. It will be noticed that the inscription has been blundered by the caster, who inserted a redundant REX between GRA and CIA. Under the GRA is engraved a letter S for Sarum, and lower down an anchor, probably the mark of the workman.

Statute Henry III. (1266). "That if a baker be convicted for not keeping his assize, the first, second, and third time he shall be amerced according to the quantity of his offence, so as he offend not above 2s. (which is an ounce and 4\(\frac{1}{4}\) weight) in his farthing loaf, but if he shall exceed 2s. then he is to be sett on the Pillorie without redemption by money; also, if he offend often, though under 2s. and will not amend, he shall be set on the Pillorie."

In the 31 Eliz\(^{th}\). it was enacted, "That a baker, if his bread of a farthing be found wanting but

All unlawfull bread may bee taken away by the Clark of the Markett, or by his deputie, or by the Maiors, Bayliffes, or other officers of Citties, Corporate Townes and Liberties (or by the Master and Wardens of the Company of Bakers of the citie of London), and distributed to poore prisoners and other poore people.*

Order by the Privy Council:—

"An order for Musty Meale. If anye person shall sell anye meale deceitfulley mixed, musty or corrupt, which may be to the hurt of mans body, or by anye deceitfull means or false sleight, so to deceive the subjects, ffor the first offence he shall be grievously amerced, ffor the seconde he shall loose his meale, ffor the third he shall suffer the judgemente of the Pillorie. And for the fourth time, he shall forsweare the towne where he dwelleth."

The following is copied from one of the old MSS. in the Salisbury Corporation Muniment Room:—

to a portrait that belonged to the Bakers' Company, but which at the time he compiled his book had been for several years in the possession of a Mr. Dennis, a baker, of Salisbury. The picture bore the following inscription:—“Mr. William Windover, Merchant in Newe Sarum, deceased ye XXIX of January 1632, hath geven to the Company of Bakers ye some of fifty pounds, to be ynjoyed to a man yerely for ever, Amen.”
At the corners of the picture were four Coats of Arms, inscribed respectively:—“I bred him”; “But I fedd him”; “I made him free”; “Yet knowne by me.” The first was his family coat, viz., sable, two bars argent, in chief three dimi-lions of the second; the second, the arms of the Merchant Adventurers; the third, the Salters’ Company; the fourth, his Merchant’s Mark with the date 1634. Below were the names of the wardens of the Bakers’ Company for the year in which the picture was painted, viz., John Odell and William Webb, wardens, 1634.

The picture was probably a copy of the portrait of William Windover* which now hangs in the Salisbury Council House, and which came from the Shoemakers’ Hall. William Windover, who was a merchant at Salisbury, gave fifty pounds each to six of the Trade Companies of the City, including the Shoemakers and the Bakers.

Among the many interesting memorials of the ancient Guilds and Companies to be seen in the Salisbury Museum are two from the Bakers’ Company, one, a carved model (gilt) of a roll of bread, which was the emblem that was carried on a wand by the Company upon public occasions.
The other is a large framed panel, on which is depicted the achievement of the Salisbury Bakers (vide page 243). Above the arms is the date 1611 and the letters C.G. and E.O., these being the initials of the two wardens of the Company at that time, viz., Christopher Gardiner and Elias Odell.

The colours of the painting are somewhat

CHAPTER XVI.

THE BUTCHERS.

This Guild is said to have been founded at the beginning of the XV. century, but it appears in the Corporation Ledger for the first time in 1440. In that year a convocation of the Mayor and citizens was held at the Council House ("Semplehous"), at which the butchers ("Boch's") were represented by the two wardens of their Guild, viz., John Chypenham and John Baker. The first named, who appears to have been a member of the Corporation (one of the 48), is referred to in the Chamberlain's accounts for the years 1448—9, "Item, Paid lxvi s. viii d. to William Hore (alderman) for a Pipe of wine, and xxiv s. to John Chyppenham Bocher for beefs and muttons, bought for a present to Lord Molyns"; and the accounts for the following year show that John Chyppenham paid a fine of xl s. to be excused from serving the offices of "Alderman and Præpositus." The Guild of "bochers" supplied "ablemen defensible harneysede" for the King's service upon many occasions during the years 1440—90. There is some evidence to show that the rank of houses (Ox Row) on the north side of the present Butcher Row, which are opposite the Blue Boar Row, were standing in the middle of the XVI. century, but that during the XIV. and XV. centuries the butchers' stalls, 24 in number, were placed in a line along the south side of the Market Square, where are now the houses known as Ox Row.
The present Butcher Row Road (then a portion of the Market) divided the line of butchers' stalls from the rank of shops and houses that were occupied by the butchers who were freemen and members of the Guild; and the slaughtering place for the Salisbury butchers was on the large open space at the rear of the shops and above the ditch (New Canal), which had been excavated in 1345 to replace a smaller channel.

The "fforreyner" or stranger butcher was not allowed to kill in the City. He was obliged to bring his meat into the town dressed ready for sale; on the other hand, the Salisbury butcher was not permitted to send his skins out of the City, but was ordered, under a penalty, to dispose of them for the use of the City craftsmen who were engaged in the leather industry.

During the mayoralty of William Waryn, and in the third year of Henry V. (1416), the following orders were issued by the Mayor and Corporation:—"That stranger butchers should not be removed from the places appointed them by the Mayor without reasonable cause, and comon and solemn convocation of the citizens and comons of the city."

"That all stranger Victuallers, as well butchers as fishmongers, should be altogether separated in their stations from the Victuallers of the city; and that no resident within the city should receive any grain exposed for sale in the market, into his house after the ninth hour for storage, on pain of half a mark, nor any fish nor flesh under the like penalty."

"Item. In the time of Walter Waryn, mayor, it was ordained that butchers should not slaughter their beasts in front of the butchers-row in the common street, but in the rear.”

“Item. That they shall not melt their fat by day, but by night, and that they shall not carry about the foul parts or intestines of their beasts by day, but by night only.”

“Item. That poulterers and all other victuallers shall sell all that they bring for sale into the city in the common market, and not in an inn, and especially rabbit-sellers, and not by night, but by day.”

In the time of John Bromle, Mayor, in the sixth year of Henry VI., “It was ordained that stranger fishermen should be separated from the fishermen of the city, and that stranger fishermen should have their stations on the common trench behind the stations of the fishermen of the city.”

The reason for this arrangement of the fish-stalls is evident. The Guildhall stood on the north side of the Fish Row, which prevented the authorities from placing the stalls of the stranger fishermen in a line with those of the foreign butchers, which, as before stated, were on the north side of the Butcher Row; consequently they were given a position on the east side of the butchers’ slaughtering place, above the great ditch or canal.

1427. “Item, ordered that the possessors of all beasts exposed for sale, shall have their place at ‘Bernewellcros’ and ‘Colverstrete’ for vendyng of them.”

At this time the regular cattle market was at Barnard’s Cross and Culver Street, and New Street, which gave its name to one of the four wards into which the City was divided, ran the whole length from the "Nether Bridge" (Crane Bridge) to Barnard's Cross.

3rd Henry V. (1416). "Item, That Victuallers, coming into the City with cheese, milk, grapes, plums, apples, pears, and other fruits, shall be compelled for the future to keep to a place opposite the tenement of Richard Oworde,* now of John Gage, where the New Cross is a building."

This cross, which became known as the Cheese Cross, stood between the present Market House and the north end of the present Minster Street, and it is also of interest to notice that this place was the market for milk, which may account for the name "milk sops," which is still applied to the centre path that runs from west to east of the Market Square.

The market for poultry and vegetables was at the Poultry Cross, which is referred to as early as 1335, in which year a cession was made to the Dean and Chapter of two tenements "opposite the High Cross where poultry is sold." The present Minster Street, with the Poultry Cross at the south end and the Cheese Cross at the north end, appears to have been used as a market for vegetables and fruit, and is referred to in some ancient documents as the Green Market.

The Corn Market was in "Castelstrete." In 1403 a tenement is described as being in "Chipyng-place," opposite the Corn Market, and which extends therefrom to the street called "Chiper-stret."

Several authorities inform us that the Wool Market was in "Endlestrete" (Endless Street),

* The name of Oworde, which is a very uncommon one in Salisbury, appears in St. Edmund's Churchwardens' Accounts twice during the XV Century.
which in early days extended as far as the four cross roads (Canal and Milford Street), but the Rev. Ed. Duke, in his Halle of John Halle, gives an extract from a deed of purchase in 1467 from William Hore (vintner and alderman) to John Halle (wool merchant and alderman) of tenements and land, which are described as opposite the market where wools are sold ("ex opposito fori ubi lane venduntur").

Upon this evidence Mr. Duke was of opinion that the property referred to in the deed was that on the Canal where the "Halle of John Halle" was subsequently built, and that consequently the Wool Market was on the Canal. But the indenture may have been in connection with the tenements held by John Halle in Winchester Street, which, at that time, was continued in front of the "Blue Bore" as far as Castle Street. This property appears in Bishop Beau-champ's Liber Niger, rent of assize, "From John Halle for a tenement in Wynecrestret called le Bolehal." If "le Bolehal" stood at the corner of Winchester Street, it would have been opposite the place where, according to other evidence, the Wool Market was at that time held.

A few years later the land on the Canal is called the Wood and Coal Market, and "Endle-strete" is referred to as the market for hemp, linen thread, woollen thread and woollen stuffs (? yarn).

There are two indentures in the City Muniment Room which throw some light upon this subject. From one of these we learn that the market for woollen thread was at the south end of "Endle-street," and also that at the junction of the four cross roads, now known as Queen Street, Catherine Street, Milford Street and the Canal, there stood another Market Cross of stone:—"Oct. 2nd, 17th Henry VIII." (1525), Indenture by which Stephen Jobson, late of New Sarum, merchant, grants for the sum of £100 his "corner tenement in which John Bremley late lived in Carthenstrete on the east side opposite the Stone Cross where woollen thread (filum laneum) is sold" (? now Mr. Cripps' corner).

The other document is the will of Gilbert Dubbere, dated January 2nd, 1342, in which he leaves to his son William in fee his "corner tenement called Wimanestrete corner opposite the market where hemp and linen thread are sold ("fori ubi canabum venditur et filum linenum venduntur").

Mr. Hatcher and others were of opinion that "Wimanestrete" or "Wynemanstrete" was the modern Milford Street. If such was the case, this corner tenement was probably where the premises of Wilkes and Son, ironmongers, now stand; but the names "Wynmane" and "Wynchester" are so often mixed up in ancient documents that it sometimes appears that both names were applied to Winchester Street, which at that time ran from the present Market House corner of Castle Street to the gate at the top of Winchester Street; e.g., the Chamberlain's account for 1473 shows "rents received 4s. for the Gate called Wynchest' Gate or Wynmane gate which William Warwyk late rebuilt ('ad-opus Maioris et Communitatis') which Edmund Penston holds; and 40s. for the annual quit rent out of the corner tenement called le III Cuppys in Wynmanstrete late let to Thomas Hille of Abingdon.” Other entries refer to “le III Cuppys in Wynchestrestrete,” and later entries show that the “Three Cupps Inne” was the corner house in Winchester Street, now in the occupation of Mr. L. S. Luckham, surgeon. On the other hand, a reference is made to a tenement called “Chauenterells corner,” between “Wynemanstrete” and the eastern extremity of “Bocher Row.”

The Corporation Ledger shows that on the 2nd June, in the first year of Edward V. (1483), it was agreed “that a communicatione may be hadde w’th Maister Baylye of this Cite for the Bocher’s Stalles of the Markett Place occupied by the Bochers to the Mayres behoofe, and the Com’altie to the use of the Chamber.” The Maister Baylye above referred to was the bailiff of the Bishop, and, under the Charter of Henry III. (1227), the income from all markets and fairs belonged to the Bishop; but in 1491 the Mayor and Corporation succeeded in obtaining from the Bishop a grant of the profits of the markets and fairs for the use of the City. After that year the City Chamberlain’s accounts include the rents of the butchers’ stalls, &c.

“At a convocation, &c. . . . (1491) Item it is appoynted an accorded that whereas John Basket, Clerke of my Lorde the Bysshop of Sarum hathe made a graunte to Thomas Blakker Mayre of Sarum and to the Co’altie of Sarum, of the profites and yssues of all the standyngs in eu’y fayre, markett and all other places w’thyn the seyd Cite to his said office appertaynyng as in the said . . . Wherupon it is nowe accorded. The sayd Will'm and others to have for there labour and Besinesse for the same after the discrec'on of the Mayre and dyvers other of his Brethren."

The account of John Fevir and Thomas Holbeme, Chamberlains of the City from Michaelmas, 24 Hen. VII. to the same feast, 1 Hen. VIII. (1508—9), "Henry Scrigge Maior," shows among the receipts for rents and profits on fairs a sum of £8 5s. 6d. for the butchers' stalls (Macellorum Carnific' in loco forali) in the Market Place, with 5s. profits on fairs, and among the allowances, "Thomas Miller bocher rent of two stalls (Macellorum) 15s."

"In the time of Bene't Davy, Maior. The account of Henry Sexton Chamberlain from Michaelmas 1 and 2 Hen. VIII. (1509—10), 22 Butchers Stalls in the Market-place at 10s. each per annum, sum £11. 2 other stalls there 9s. per annum, 18s. 1565, December 11. "It is ordered and determined by the general consent of the assembly, that no foreign boucher dwelling out of this City shall at any time after Christmas next kill any victual, nor have or make any slaughter-house within this City of Sarum upon such paine as the Maior for the time being by his discre'con shall appoint to the presumer and offender doing the contrarie in that behalf."

1568, May 2. "It is ordered, That no boucher of this City nor foreign boucher shall utter or sell to any p'sone or p'sones any kind of victual at or in any mans howse, nor carry it aboute the streates to utter or sell to any p'sone or p'sones, but to sell in their shoppes and stalles onley."

The butchers were re-constituted as a Company in the latter part of Elizabeth's reign, and again in 1614, when the following orders were ratified by the Mayor:

In ancient times Fisherton Bridge was called the Upper Bridge ("Superior pons de ffysherton") and Crane Bridge, ("Inferior pons de ffysherton") the Lower, or Nether bridge. The Upper Bridge appears to have been built on a series of arches extending from the present Crown Chambers to the site of the Maundrel Hall, and probably at one time with a drawbridge in the centre, which was raised at night. Some of these arches were uncovered by Mr Doran Webb, F S.A., when the present County Hotel was built in 1895, when corbels which possibly formed supports for the houses on either side of the bridge (as was the case on Old London Bridge and on Old Bristol Bridge) were exposed to view.
In 1411 the Rose Inn, which was re-built about 1830, and re-named the London Inn, stood where are now the Crown Chambers and Messrs. Wilson's offices, and on the opposite side of the road was another inn called the "Ramme," the name of which was changed to the King's Head in 1526.

On the other side of the river (Maundrel Hall site) the Dominican House of Black Friars or Friars Preachers stood, but after the suppression of the Monasteries part of the site was occupied by the Sun Inn.

There is little evidence to show what buildings occupied the site of the present Clock Tower before the County Prison was built there in 1550, but we have the record of an inn named the White Horse which stood just beyond the prison.

From the Corporation records we learn that a passage (the entrance to which is still in existence) ran from the High Street to the river, with a postern gate and steps at the lower end. These steps may have been the stairs referred to in the order to the butchers. (No butcher shall empte the bellies, nor cast any intralls, &c., over ffisherton bridge except it be in the currant, &c., or else in the usual place down the stairs appointed for that purpose.) It is just possible that the "Puddinge Bridge" which is referred to in the next extract, was a small foot-bridge which crossed the river from the steps to the rear of the prison, and led across the land upon which the Infirmary now stands, past the White Horse Inn to one of the two roads which led to Fisherton:—"April 5, 1616. Item. Forasmuche as the Puddinge Bridge hathe alwayes byn repayred by the butchers of this cittie soe testifyed by some anciente men of this Companye, and yet nowe the butchers refuse to doe the same; and whereas the butchers doe nowe sell their beasts bellyes to poore women and others that puddinge wyves* doe empte those bellyes in the ryvers in the stretes to the greate annoyance of the cittye, Yt is therefore ordered that the butchers shall maynteyne the same bridge as hathe byn used. And noe butcher to sell any beasts bellyes to any before yt be emptyed at the same bridge, or in some other place not noysome to the cittye, and wash yt at that bridge, or at the greate ryver or some other back ryver that runneth not into the open stretes, uppon paysne of fforfeyture for eu’y offence V s.”

An order was made that bulls should be beaten at the bull-ring on the day previous to the slaughtering of the same

The bull ring, which is still preserved in the Municipal Offices, was fixed in the Market opposite where are now the cells adjoining the Council House. The excuse for the ancient but cruel practice of baiting bulls, which was finally abolished by Act of Parliament in 1835, appears to have been that the tough flesh of the bull was thereby made tender and more digestible as food.

* Pudding, the stomach or one of the entrails of a pig, sheep, or other animal, stuffed with a mixture of minced meat, suet, oatmeal, seasoning, &c., boiled and kept till needed.

Pudding-wife, a woman who sells puddings or sausages (Murray’s Dict.).
CHAPTER XVII.

THE BREWERS.

This is one of the earliest of the Craft Guilds to appear in the Salisbury Corporation Ledger. At a convocation held in 1440 to make an assessment for strengthening the defences of the City, this fraternity ("Pandoxatorum") was represented by their wardens viz., William Halstede and Walter Carrogan. The "Gild of Bruars" supplied six armed men as part of a levy of forty men raised by the City of Salisbury in 1463 for the "succour of ye Earl of Warwewyke against ye Scots." Again, in 1470, when a levy of horsemen was commanded for service "against ye rebelles and traitours, George Duc of Clarence and Richard Earl of Warwewyke." And on many subsequent occasions the Brewers' Guild supplied their quota of men for the King's service.

In very early days beer is said to have been made from wheat, but this liquor did not keep as long as that prepared from barley malt, which was in general use at the time when this Guild was founded. Before the introduction of hops into England from Flanders (about 1524) ale was the name generally applied to malt liquor. The assize of bread and ale ("panis et cerevisiae"), 51 Hen. III, 1267, regulated the selling and inspection of these two staple articles of diet at that time. Officers were annually appointed and sworn in the Court-leet for the assize of ale and ale-measures; the "gustatores cervisiae," called in different localities "ale-founders," "ale-conners" and "ale-tasters," were sworn to examine beer and ale, to take care that the liquor was good and wholesome, that it was sold at the proper assize prices, and to present dishonest ale-vendors to the Court-leet.

One of the clauses in the agreement made between the Bishop, Simon de Gandavo, and the citizens of Salisbury in 1306 (a copy of which is in the Corporation Muniment Room) says "the assize of ale had been broken by ancient delinquents, with the fines according . . . in future it shall stand according to the common law and the King . . . and delinquents be amerced according to the gravity of the offence."

The following extract is taken from another ancient MS. in the Muniment Room, viz., a copy of a deed of Confirmation by the Dean of Sarum confirming the Charters of Bishops Richard Poore (1225) and Robert Wyville (1367) :

"Also whereas ye said cittizens time out of minde have been possessed of ye brigges standing upon the brinke of Avon, by payeng yerely unto the said Bushoppe and his successors on eu’y brigge one peny, . . . And whereas from the like time out of minde eu’y ostler (brewer) in the Citty aforesaid as long as he would be ostler shall pay for his ostry yerely xii d.; viz., for half the yere vi d.; and eu’y tapster one shall pay yerely vi d. And that from the aforesaid time the Mayor of the Citty aforesaid, together with the Bushop’s bailiff for the time being, shall have the Assaying and Assize of bread, wine, beere and ale; and furthermore the gou’ment of the pease and of victuals within the Citty . . . Which grant and confirmation in all things as aforesaid, with the tenures, possessions and customs of them the cittizens in all things having ratified for us and our successors, we ratify and confirm unto the said cittizens, their heires and successors for eu’r by these p’ntes. Dated in our Chapiter House the second of the Kalends of October, Ao. Dni 1376."
Beer at this time was the common drink of the people, and one of the punishments for brewing bad beer was the ducking-stool. Apparently there were a great number of brewers in Salisbury in proportion to the population of the City. Among the many regulations made during the XV. century not the least interesting is the following:—

1464, August 27.—"Ordinance of the Venerable Father, Richard Lord Bishop of Sarum, and the Mayor and certain 'Concitizens' of New Sarum, touching the quality and price of ale and beer brewed within the said city. First, every brewer is to make a good wholesome brew of sufficient strength, and every flagon* of the better ale is to be sold for one penny, and of the second ale three flagons shall sell for one penny, until a new Assize be ordained by the officers, and thirteen flagons of the better ale shall sell as a dozen, and six flagons of the said ale with a pottle† shall sell as a half dozen, and likewise of the second ale according to its price. Item, there are to be four tasters, to wit one to each ward, to taste and assay the ale brewed from time to time in their several wards within the house of every inn-keeper when the ale shall be in a certain vessel called the Kyse‡, as well in respect of its soundness as of its strength and flavour; and if by them, or any of them, it shall be found defective in point of brew, to wit, in soundness or strength or flavour, forthwith within twenty-four hours they shall be bound to bestir themselves and present the defect or defects found by them to the Mayor, Seneschal and bailiff, or two of them . . . to the effect that the tavern in which the said ale was found be forfeited to the Lord Bishop without fine and redemption. And every inn-keeper aforesaid shall carry or cause to be carried his ale to his customers and other men without taking any portage therefor, provided the ale exceed not four flagons, and in case any inn-keeper being so required by the Mayor or his deputy, shall refuse to do his office, he shall be excluded ipso facto from brewing, and be compelled by the Mayor, Seneschal

* A flagon was a liquid measure, containing about 1½ gallons.
† A pottle held two quarts, or half a gallon. Pottle-Pot = A two-quart tankard.
‡ Kyse, probably the same as "Keeve," which, according to Halliwell's Dictionary of Provincial Words, was the name used in the West of England for a large tub or vessel used in brewing.

Keeve = A large vessel to ferment liquors in. A mashing-tub. (Boag's Imperial Lexicon).

or bailiff to make oath not to brew within the City for a certain time to be by them or one of them limited. And furthermore it is ordained and agreed that every inn-keeper who shall be found culpable and in default in respect of his brewing, and by the Mayor, Seneschal or bailiff or one of them shall be so convict, shall for the first offence be in grave mercy, for the second offence in graver mercy, and for the third offence shall be punished with imprisonment of the body at the discretion of the Lord Bishop, if he be present, and if he be absent, at the discretion of the Mayor, Seneschal or bailiff, if they be present, and otherwise at the discretion of the Mayor; and for the fourth offence, he shall suffer the penalty of the tumbril on the first or second Market-day next after the defect was discovered.

On 1st June, 1406, Henry IV. granted (upon payment of a fine of 100 marks) a licence to the Mayor and Corporation "that they may hold tenements and rents to the value of one hundred marks per annum, within the said City, of them who may have goodwill, and good disposition for their aid and relief, by way of gift, sale, legacy or other inducement," &c. This licence was confirmed by Bishop Hallam on 4th April, 1412. Hence the prayer for King Henry IV. was the first on the ancient roll of the commemoration of benefactors, as the second was "for the soul of Robert Hallam, lately Bishop," &c.

Hatcher in his History, p. 100, says "William Teynterer, Junr., at his death bequeathed certain hereditaments to the Mayor and Corporation," as forming the confraternity of St. George. Among the witnesses to a deed of William Warmwell, who was one of the executors of William Teyterer, was John Monor, Mayor, and Richard Spencer, and letters patent (Henry IV.) were granted to them on 21st February, 1414, giving them licence to acquire four messuages, &c. On the 7th of the following month John Monor and Richard Spencer, by virtue of the above licences, delivered and confirmed to John Becket, Mayor, &c., four messuages to be held by the Mayor, &c., of the chief lord in mitigation of subsidies, collections, &c. During the next 20 years the Corporation acquired a considerable number of houses in the City, including several inns. They were the owners of The George Inn; Pynnok’s Inn; a messuage in the street “going to the Friars Preachers* of Fyssherton Aucher,” which at a later date became known as Bovers Place, le Lyon, le Ramme, and The King’s Head; a messuage in the street going towards the Church of Saint Edmund, and containing seven shops; a messuage opposite the gate of the Friars Minor of Sarum, containing three tenements, with the corner house opposite the gate, to which are contiguous seven cottages; and the messuage “which Walter Short holds in Wynchestrestret under the chamber of which ten’nt the water of the common ditch runs” (subsequently known as Pette’s Store and Three Cups Inn).

During the XV. century Salisbury must have been full of inns for the reception of numerous pilgrims who came to visit the great shrine of St. Osmund, second only to that of St. Thomas-a-Beckett at Canterbury.

A considerable amount of information respecting the hostellries which existed in Salisbury at that time is supplied by the Corporation ledgers, the Chamberlain’s rolls, ancient wills and other MSS. in the City Muniment Room.

* The Dominicans, Black Friars, or Friars Preachers, owe their origin to Dominic Guzman, or as he is termed “St. Dominic” . . . he laid the foundation of the order in 1215 . . . he sent Gilbert de Fresney, with twelve of the brethren into England. Within a short period, they must have fixed themselves in this neighbourhood . . . in what is now called West St., Wilton. (Hatcher p. 58.)

It was about the end of the year 1280 that the Friars Preachers established themselves in Fisherton-Anger, in the West suburb of Salisbury, divided from the city by the river Avon, and communicating with it by means of Fisherton Bridge (The Black Friars of Wiltshire. Wilts Arch. Mag. Vol. 18, p. 162).
THE GEORGE INN.

The picturesque front of the ancient structure in High Street which formed a part of the "Hospice of Georgys Yn" is one of the most interesting objects in Salisbury, both to the artist and the antiquary of the present day. The Inn became the most important hostelry in the City, and is occasionally referred to as "Ye Greate Inne of Ye George."

Hatcher, referring to this Inn, says:—"From the vicinity of the Royal Residence at Clarendon, this Inn may be considered as one of the best and most commodious in the West of England."

The beams in the panelled and oak pillared hall, carved into representations of Edward II. and his Consort, Isabella of France, and the carving on the remaining massive gate-post, indicate that the building was erected during the reign of that Monarch, 1307—27. Originally it may have been a pilgrims' hostel dedicated to Saint George, but most probably it was connected from its earliest days with the newly-founded Guild of St. George, the fraternity of the Mayor and Corporation, which originated in 1306.

The property appears to have been owned by the Teynterer family. The names of Nicholas Teynterer, William Teynterer th'elder and William Teynterer th'yonger appear among the very earliest of the benefactors on the ancient Bede Roll of the City. William Teynterer was Mayor in 1330, and a William Teynterer, senior, occupied the same position in 1364. William Teynterer, junior, who served the office of Mayor in 1361 and in 1375, died in 1376, and according to the index of the lost volumes of Domesday the will of William Teynterer, junior, was proved 50 Edward III., 1376.*

He left the value of certain property to the Mayor and Corporation as the Guild of St. George, "and for the good of his soul and the souls of his wives, &c.," subject to the life interest of his widow, "Alesia," who subsequently married George Meriot.

The sale of the property was left to William Warmwell, his executor, an alderman, who served the office of Mayor in 1380, and whose name also appears on the Bede Roll as a benefactor. In 1397 William Warmwell sold the reversion of tenements at the corner of "Wynchestre-stret and Gygore-stret," and distributed the proceeds "in sight of the Mayor" to the Guild and for the souls, &c.

On November 17th, 1401, Robert Deverel, John Dogton, and Thomas Aylmerton, chaplain (who were probably trustees appointed by William Teynterer), release and quit claim to John Monor, Richard Spencer, William Walter, and Nicholas Hardyng, their heirs, &c.; all title to the tenement called "Georges Yn," situate in N.S. in "Ministrestret," &c.

At this time the Inn was held by "Alesia" (widow of William Teynterer) and her husband, George Meriot, and there is no evidence to show whether the purchase by the aldermen, Monor, Spencer, Walter and Harding, was made out of their own means or by a general subscription, but in 1414, after the King had granted Monor and Spencer a licence to acquire the property, the Corporation Ledger contains lists of subscribers to the purchase of "Georgys Yn." Very few of the names, however, are legible.

It may be of interest to notice that each of the above-named aldermen served the office of Mayor, viz., John Monor in 1389 and in 1398, Richard Spencer in 1396, William Walter in 1402, and Nicholas Harding in 1406.

The will of "Alesia," who died in 1408, is dated Saturday next after the feast of St. Martin (November 13th), A.D. 1406. She desires to be buried in the Chapel of the late William Teynterer, junior, in the Church of St. Thomas' the Martyr, N.S.

"Also y Aleise forseid ordeyne and byquethe Cli to the pore co' es of the citee of Salesbury, the wh ich wer' ordeyned by arbitrement of John Moner, Ric' Spencer, John Wollop and otheres in discharging of all talages of the Com'unes in Salesbury that ye John Monor, Ric' Spencer, William Walter and Nich' Hardynge ordeyne performe and fulfill that thilke Cli forseid of the sale of Georges Yn in Salesbury by yowre lynynge bee truely performyd after the condition of the indentures bytwene the Mair, who' r it be, in Salesbury, and yowe and me therof y made for the soules of Will' Teintorer, yonger, and his welwillyng in descharge of my soule, and in charge of yowr soules wiche y aske God to wyntness that ye John Monor, Ric' Spencer, William Walter, and Nich' Hardynge this forseid Mat're in yowr side be ful performed in wey of Charite and upon yowr soule dethe."

The will of George Meriot was proved on September 23rd, 1410. He gave to his executors all his goods and utensils in his "hospice of Georgis Ŷn" to be sold by them and the proceeds distributed "for the souls of himself, his late wife Alesia, and all faithful departed, &c."
On April 5th, 1412, licence was granted to the Corporation by Robert (Hallam) Bishop and the Dean and Chapter to acquire lands, &c., to the yearly value of £40, and on February 21st, 1414, the Corporation received letters patent of Henry IV., which recited that he had previously (1406) granted a licence to the Mayor, &c., to acquire lands to the annual value of 100 marks, and wishing to make the said licence more efficacious, granted to John Monor and Richard Spencer licence to acquire four messuages, &c.

On the 7th of the following month John Monor and Richard Spencer, by virtue of the before mentioned licences, deliver and confirm to John Becket, then Mayor, and the community of New Sarum, four messuages; "of which one with laundry houses, chambers, solars, cellars, shops, &c., called 'Georges Ynne,' is situated in 'Ministrestrete,' between the shops which Walter Couk holds of Nicholas Hardynge on the north and the shop which John Eteshale holds of the scholars of the house of De Vaux on the south."

After the Corporation had acquired the property they spent a considerable amount of money in repairs, and in 1418 "The Hospice called Georgis Yn" was let on lease to John Burton at a rent of £20 per annum, together with the laundry adjacent, out of which there was an annual payment of 19s. 4d. to be made to the scholars of De Vaux, and also an obit for William Teynterer and Alesia his wife, to be kept on the feast of the Exaltation of the Holy Cross (September 14th) in the Church of St. Thomas the Martyr.

In 1426 the George Inn was demised by the Mayor (John Noble) and Corporation to Thomas Allesley, "osteler," with the shops before, and with the solars, cellars, chambers, stables, houses, barns, &c., situate on the east side of Mynster-strete, with all the beds and other utensils appurtenant to the said Inn for the maintenance of the same. After this date the name of the Inn appears each year in the Chamberlain's account; e.g., 1445—£17 6s. 8d. from Henry Smyth for the rent of the Inn (hospicii) called Georgys Yn; and among the payments, 19s. 4d. paid to the scholars of De Vaux out of Georgys Yn. In 1449 the tenant, John Byshampton, paid £13 6s. 8d. rent, and the Corporation spent several small sums for repairs, including 3s. 8d. for 500 tiles, 8d. for 100 laths, and 14d. for lath-nails.

On Tuesday, the 3rd of June, 1449, at eight o'clock at night, there was a serious rising made by the common citizens of Salisbury against Lord de Moleyns in the Inn called Le George, on account of which rising Master Nicholas Upton, Precentor of Salisbury, and Walter Bayly, Canon of the same Church, went to the Inn called Le George with the body of the Lord (i.e., the Host), under the protection of which, between the said Nicholas and Walter, he was by the grace of God led safely into the Close of the Canons.*

The 1453 accounts contain a considerable number of payments for repairs to this house, one of which is "20s. for making one baye wyndowe at Georgys Yn."

It was from the courtyard of the George Inn that Robert Hungerford, second Lord Moleyns, on his way to join the British Army at Blaye in Guienne, commanded by his relative, Talbot the famous Earl of Shrewsbury, in 1454, issued forth with his retainers to break sconces with the citizens of Salisbury.

In 1456, during the Mayoralty of John Halle, there is an entry which records the letting of the Inn to Robert Cooke for 16 years at £16 per annum. The house appears to have been damaged by fire soon after this date, as on May 18th in the following year (John Wheler, Maior) it was agreed that "the Chamberlains should repair all the houses and chambers of Georgis Inne which had lately been burnt, at the cost of the City."

In 1474 the "Georgis Inne" was demised to John Gryme, saddler, for six years at £12 13s. 4d. rent, and the following particulars which were attached to John Gryme's lease will give some idea of the extent of this house. The chambers for guests numbered thirteen, viz., the Principal Chamber, the Earl's Chamber and the Pantry adjoining, the Oxford Chamber, the Abingdon or Middle Chamber, the Squire's Chamber, the Lombard's Chamber, the Garret, the George Chamber, the Clarendon Chamber, the Understent Chamber, the Fitzwareyn Chamber, and the London Chamber. There were, besides the Tavern and Wine Cellar, the Buttery, the Kitchen, the Hostry, the Hostler's Chamber, and the Parlour above the Warehouse.

The furniture of the period appears to have been of a most simple description. The beds, of which there were one, two or three in a chamber, were classed according to the number of planks, which supplied the place of modern sacking, and consisted of from two to five in each bed. The dining tables were of oak or beech planks, supported on trestles, with forms for seats. Apparently the guests had their meals together in their respective sleeping rooms, as in each chamber we find the same kind of accommodation, viz., a dining table of oak or beech, with trestles to support it, and forms for seats.

"Implements and necessaries in the Inn called Georg Inn in the City of New Sarum delivered to John Gryme, saddler, on the ninth day of April in the thirteenth year of the reign of King Edward the Fourth (1474). Imprimis, in the principal chamber, 3 beds containing xvj. planks; old table for meals of beech 11½ feet in length and 2 feet in breadth, one form of elm 13½ feet in length and 11 inches in breadth, one form of oak 12 feet long and 11 inches broad, one form of oak 7 feet long and 9 inches broad, 2 pair of trestles, 1 cupboard made from 2 planks, and 1 sperum* near the entrance door of the same chamber made of wood and with a pair of planks.

"In the 'Erlys' Chamber 3 beds containing 15 planks, 1 old table for meals of beech 11½ feet long and 25 inches broad, 1 oak table 8½ feet long and 24 inches broad and 2 inches in thickness, 1 oak form 10 feet long and 12 inches broad, 1 elm form 10 feet long and 20 inches broad, 1 oak form 9 feet long and 8½ inches broad, 2 old forms of poplar both 7 feet long and 8 inches broad, 1 form of ash 7 feet long, 8 inches broad and 3 inches thick, 1 oak form 6 feet long, 10 inches broad and 3 inches thick, 1 oak form 6 feet long, 10 inches broad and 2 inches thick, and 2 common trestles.

"In the pantry of the same chamber 2 beds, containing 4 planks, 2 trestles and a table, and 1 beech form 6 feet long and 8 inches broad."

* Sperum—Du Cange (Gloss) gives this as equivalent to spera, which has among other meanings that of a round vessel.

The above is an extract from the Inventory of the goods delivered by the Corporation to their new tenant, John Gryme. The list includes in addition to the above the furnish of the Oxford Chamber, the tavern, wine cellar, the buttery, the kitchen, &c.

In 1579 Salisbury suffered from the plague, and in consequence of this having kept visitors away from the City, the Corporation allowed Robert Spikernell, who was the tenant of the George Inn at the time, to surrender his lease and forgave him the sum of £22 10s. 0d. due from him as rent at Lady Day. From about 1590 to 1624 the Free School was held at the Inn, probably in the large room on the north side of the Courtyard, in which concerts and meetings were held during the early part of last century. The Corporation Ledger, 1624, says:—

"The Scholehouse removed from the George because of the inconveniency of cominge to the schollers by the Taphouse and inne, therefore a lease is taken of the Scholehouse in Castle street of Dr. Mosely's land for 40 yeares at 20 shillings per annum of Henry Heelye."

The residence of James I. at Salisbury attracted to the City actors and other caterers for public entertainment to such an extent that the Corporation prohibited any innholder or other inhabitant "from suffering any players of interludes to perform after seven of the clock in the afternoon"; and in 1624 "it is furthur agreed that from henceforth all players shall make their plays from the George Inn, the size and form of the inner quadrangle being well adapted for that purpose."
It was at this Inn that Samuel Pepys recorded his welcome on 10th June, 1668:—“Come to the George Inn, where lay in a silk bed, and very good diet, to supper then to bed. 11th, Up and down the town, and find it a very brave place . . . to Stonehenge . . . and so home to dinner, and that being done, paid the reckoning, which was so exorbitant . . . that I was mad, and resolve to trouble the mistress about it, and get something for the poor.” In 1769 an advertisement appeared in the Salisbury and Winchester Journal:—“To be sold by auction for the term of 40 years, renewable every 14 years . . . a large Messuage in High Street, formerly the George Inn . . . containing 30 feet in front, 147 feet wide and 201 feet deep, with stabling for 50 horses,” apply John Maton, City Chamberlain.

PYNNOK’S INN or “THE HELME.”

(Now 24, 26, 28, 30, High Street, Mr. Rawlings’ and others.)

This Inn was started soon after the foundation of the City by William Pynnok, who was succeeded by his son, Richard Pynnok, who, with John de Braundeston as his colleague, was chosen to represent the City of Salisbury in the 1295 Parliament. Richard Pynnok bequeathed the property to his wife Lucy, and at her death to his son, John Pynnok, who let it to John the Taverner. On October 4th, 1333, “John, son of Richard Pynnok, grants to Alice, the widow of John le Taverner, a tenement called Pynnokys Yn in Mynestrestret between a tenement of his (32, High Street?) on one side, and a certain stream running through . . . next to the tenement of Geoffry de Werministe on the other.” It may be explained that Geoffry of Warminster, who was Mayor in 1335 and again in 1342, and was also one of the Bishop’s Coroners in 1343, owned and possibly resided in the house on the north side of Pynnok’s Inn, which after his death became “Countewelles Inn.” This inn stood on the site now occupied by Mr. Grove’s premises, and the stream running between the two properties conveyed water from the river to the open channel in High Street.

In 1374 Elena (widow of Edward Pynnok, and daughter of Simon de Oxenford, Mayor in 1366) conveyed Pynnok’s Inn to her son John, who granted a lease of the property in 1385 to William Fuystour and Edith, his wife, for their lives. After their death the inn called “Pynnokys Yn Mynstrestrete” was leased to “William Fyns of Basyngstoke,” who demised the property on 19th August, 1428, to John Bromley and other members of the Corporation, at a yearly rent of ten marks, and the services of a Chaplain of the Fraternity of “Seynte George,” &c. They covenanted also to provide a convenient (honestam) chamber and a stable for the said William or his assign during his stay in the City for the purpose of receiving his rent, &c.

In 1431 a release was executed from Richard Gatour to William Waryn, John Bromley and others of the Corporation of “Pynnokes Yn” and other properties in the City; this document is endorsed “Release of Richard Gatour to W. Waryn and others for the tenements given to the Mayor and Community." On the same date an indenture was sealed by which the Mayor and Corporation made themselves liable for an annual rent charge of 15s. to the Procurator and the Community of the Vicars of the Church of St. Mary, Sarum, out of the tenements formerly called "Pynnockis Inne."

The Chamberlain's account for the following year includes the receipt of £4 13s. 4d. for the rent of the inn called Pynnokys Inne in which Stephen Hendy lived, and among resolved rents (resoluti redditus) is a payment "To the Vicars of St. Mary's Church 15s." After this time the inn appears in the Corporation Ledger as "The Helme late Pynnokys Yn Mynstrestrete alias Hyghstrete."

On 8th April, 2 Richard III. (1485), "Yt was thoroughly agreed between the Maier and his brethern of the oone parte," and Thomas Blakker (Mayor in 1491) of the other, that the latter should take to "ferme all ther Inne and ten'ts called the Helme otherwyse Pynnockes Inne with all the shoppes and ten'ntries longinge y'to for LXI yeres payeing IV pounds rent yerly," upon condition that he "agreeth to bilde anewe all the said ten'ts of the Helme aforestrete of II stagis alofte honestley and sufficiently as hit shalbe to the worship of the said cite, at his owne proper costis. . . . And that the said bildying of the new in man'r and forme aforesayd shalbe made w'thyn the term of the forst yeris."

In March, 1486, Thomas Blakker was released from his lease upon the payment to him of xx s. by the Mayor, W. Boket, and a gift by himself of "X okis of goode tymbre." Henry Horton then became the tenant, but in 1491 the Corporation pulled down the old inn and built upon the site four shops with dwelling houses, and obtained a confirmation of the rent charge of 15s. to the Vicars of the Cathedral, after which the rents received for these four tenements were two at 53s. 4d. each and two at 46s. 8d. each per annum.

THE RAMME (later King's Head), BRIDGE STREET.

The earliest reference to this inn, which stood on the site of the present County Hotel, is on 2nd November, 1426. Indenture by which William Warwyck, Mayor, and the community of New Sarum granted and demised to "John Bover bocher" a messuage with solars, cottages, &c., situate at the Upper Bridge, Fisherton ("ad superiorem pontem de fisherton Aucher") between the tenement which Thomas Randolf holds on the east and the common latrine there on the west, together with the houses over the same, which said messuage (the licence of the King and of such others as were necessary having been first obtained) the said Mayor and Commonalty have lately acquired by the gift and feoffment of John Monor, formerly citizen, for 13 years at an annual rent of four marks sterling, the said John Bover to maintain the same in repair at his own cost. In 1455 the rent received by the Chamberlain was "60s. for the messuage in which Alicia Bover lives," and on the 8th July, 1456 (Ledger B), there is an appointment of William Swayne and other members of the Corporation to supervise repairs that were ordered to be executed "at the tenement which Bover lately inhabited called le Lyon." Included in the charges for these repairs is, "for one piece of timber for supporting the Upper Chamber (solarium) of the new house built on the bank of 'Avene' 8d. Carpenters for the same by contract, 10d. And for logges, twistes, and nails used in mending the door of the 'parlor' with wages of the carpenter 2d. And for making a 'hedbrand & aree ejusdem' by contract 8d. And 4 loads of earth for mending the walls 12d. with hazelrods 4d. and two men plastering the same for 2 days 17d. Sum 5s. 9d."

The following year £4 was received as rent for Bover's tenement which John Colyne, Bruwere, held near the Upper Bridge. In 1470 the inn called Bover's place ("hospice voc' Bove's place ad superiorem pontem de fissherton Aucher") was let by the Corporation to Hugh Willett, and the Chamberlain's roll for 1473 shows the receipt of "Rent 60s. for Bover's place near the upper bridge leading to Fissherton, with the houses built upon the bank of 'Avene' adjoining the same, now let to Claricia Wylett."

In 1483 this property appears in the ledger under a new name, and we read that "the Inn called le Ramme was let to John Broun," and the rent roll for the next year includes "for le Ramme at upper bridge let to John Broun 60s. a year."

The account for 1509 shows received "66s. 8d. for the hostelry at fissherton bridge called le Ramme in which Henry Horton dwells." (The words le Ramme are underlined, and in a later hand-writing "The Kingishead" appears in the margin).

An interesting reference to Richard Easton and the King’s Head Inn appears in Prolusiones Historicae, by the Rev. E. Duke. In note 8 Essay V., we read that John Taylor (the “Water Poet”), a waterman on the Thames, who wrote in the reigns of Elizabeth and James I., and whose works are now scarce, and are sold at a high price, decided in 1623 “to make a voyage with his wherry and five men from London to Christchurch, and from thence up the river Avon to Salisbury; his object being a survey of the river to ascertain what impediments, if any, existed to the rendering of it navigable from the sea.” The tract which he wrote on this occasion, entitled “A Discovery by Sea from London to Salisbury,” he dedicated to “the Nobility, Gentry, and Commonalty who are inhabitants or well-wishers to the welfare of the City of Salisbury and County of Wiltshire.” After a short preamble in prose, declaratory of his purpose, the poetic impulse seizes him, and he launches forth into a poem, in which he in a pleasing manner relates his passage from London to Christchurch Haven. The remainder of his tract is completed in prose, and describes his passage up the river Avon. He says:—“As I passed up the river, at least 2000 swans, like so many pilots, swam in the deepest places before me and shewed me the way. When I came to the town of Ringwood . . . I there met with his Maisties trumpeters, and there my fellowes . . . did walke on the banke, and gave mee two excellent flourishes with their trumpets, for the which I thanke them in print. . . . At last I came to a towne called Fording Bridge,* where . . . a grievous mischance happened; for two men being swimming or washing in the river, a Butcher passing over the bridge (with a Mastiffe Dogge with him) did cast a stone into the water, and say a Ducke, at which the Dogge leap'd into the river and seazed upon one of the men and kild him, and the butcher leaping in after, thinking to save the man, was also slaine by his owne dogge, the third man also hardly escaping, but was likewise bitten of him. From thence I passed further to a place called Hale, where we were welcomed by the Right Worshipful Sir Thomas Penruddock Knight. . . .

So passing in our course . . . we came to Langford (Longford Castle), where we were well entertained by the Right Honorable the Lord Edward Gorges . . . to whom in love and duty we proferred the gift of our tattred, wind shaken, and weather-beaten Boate, which (after our being at Salisbury, being but two miles from thence) his lordship accepted. And though hee knew shee was almoste unserviceable, yet his noble bounty was such that hee rewarded us with the price of a newe Boate.’ The poetic waterman then argues on the advantages that would arise to the City of Salisbury from making the river navigable, which, he gives his opinion, might easily have been done. It appears that he, with his five strong and hardy companions, made their voyage from Christchurch Haven to Salisbury in one day. Taylor says:—“So on the same Friday at night wee came to Salisbury, where wee brought our Boate thorow Fisherton Bridge, on the west side of the city, taking our lodging at the signe of the Kinge’s Head there, with mine host Richard Estman, whose brother Thomas was one of our watermen which came in the Boate thither from London." On the next day, Taylor relates, he walked over to Wilton House, with which it appears he was well pleased, as he breaks forth into a poetic eulogy on the occasion.

It is stated by H. P. Maskell and E. W. Gregory, the authors of Old County Inns (Pitman and Sons, 1910), that Taylor kept a tavern in Phœnix Alley, Longacre. "Being a faithful royalist he set up the sign of the 'Mourning Crown' over his house to express his sorrow at the tragic death of Charles I., but was compelled by the Parliament to take it down. He replaced it with his own portrait and the following lines:

hangs for a sign,
Then gentle reader
Why not mine?

The last of the numerous coaches which at one time were on the road between Salisbury and London, "The Quicksilver," started from the King's Head. It made its last journey to Town on 2nd October, 1846 (Wheeler).

THE THREE CUPS INN, WINCHESTER STREET.

The extensive and substantially-built premises in Winchester Street now occupied by Mr. L. S. Luckham, surgeon, together with the wine stores and cellars of Mr. Richard Dear, formed at one time the Three Cups Inn. A large yard, with stabling for a considerable number of horses, was also attached to the hostelry. This property came into the possession of the Corporation in 1431, when a lease of the tenement was granted to William Pette; after which the Chamberlain's roll shows the receipt of "40s. Quit Rent of the corner tenement in which William Pette lives." On 20th January, 1445, "William Pette of New Sarum and Isabella his wife, grant in fee to Thomas Hille of Abendon in the County of Berks and Johanna his wife the corner tenement with shops, cottages and gardens &c. situated on the north side of Wynemanstrete" &c.

The Chamberlain's accounts up to 1473 show a credit each year either as "40s. for the annual Quit Rent out of the tenement called 'Pette Storu' now Thomas Hille's," or as "40s. for the rent of Assize for the tenement of Isabella late wife of William Pette." In 1484—5 we get "40s. For a quit rent out of the corner tenement called 'le III Cuppys in Wynmanstrete' late let to Thomas Hille of Abyngdon." From 1497 (in which year it cost the Corporation 54s. 3d. for repairs) to 1509 the inn was held by Robert Stacy at a quit rent of 60s. Thomas Burge, who was the tenant in 1565, paid an annual rent of £4, and his son, Edmonde Burge, who succeeded him, was granted a lease of the III Cuppes in Winchester Street, alias Wynman Street.

In 1671 Giles Naish entered into a contract with the Corporation, upon condition that they would grant him a lease of 80 years of the "Three Cuppes Inn" at an annual rent of six pounds, to rebuild the house, with three "goode lower roomes," that is to say, a hall, a parlour, a kitchen, and to make cellars; also to build the house three stories high, and to build a malthouse "bigge or wyde enough therin to make xx quarters of malt at leaste by the weeke," and other necessary rooms, the whole to be erected within three years. In 1748 Richard Samborn, wine merchant, was granted a 40 years' lease of the inn, and apparently he made an assignment of this lease in 1773 to Captain John Wyche, when the house was converted into a private residence, and the wine merchants' business was carried on in the adjoining cellars (now in the occupation of Mr. Richard Dear, Wine Merchant) under the name of Wyche & Son. John Wyche (whose portrait hangs in the banqueting room at the Council House, Salisbury) was a native of the City, who had retired from the Service of the Hon. East India Company in 1769 and resided on an estate which he had purchased at Winterbourne. Owing to the loss of £10,000 by an unfortunate investment, John Wyche came into Salisbury during 1774, and purchased the wine merchant's business from Richard Sambourne, who had just received an extension of his lease from the Corporation. In the following year John Wyche became a member of the Corporation, he was made an alderman in 1780, and elected Mayor of the City in 1783. He was granted a new lease of "the corner tenement in Winchester St. heretofore an Inne called the Three Cups" in 1788. After his death in 1805 his son (Alderman) Hezekiah Wyche, who was Mayor in 1807, lived in the house until 1817. He entered into a partnership (which was dissolved in 1815) with Wyatt & Foot, Wine Merchants, of Endless Street.

A few years later John Finch succeeded to the business of Wyche & Son, and that of Wyatt & Foot was transferred to John Cother in 1826. Phillip Pinckney Cother became a partner in 1841, and in 1871 the business of John Cother & Son was purchased by Messrs. Richardson Brothers, who were then established as Wine Merchants in

THE STAR INN, BROWN STREET.

The Rydedore (? Ray d’or), which soon after 1430 was re-named The Star, has the earliest record of any inn in the city. It stands at the corner of Brown Street and the present Trinity Street, which in ancient times formed a part of New Street. In the year 1332 “John son and heir of Clement atte Rydedore” conveyed to Alice his sister for her life his ten’nts in “Brounstrete between the strete called Newstrete” on the south and the ten’nt of William Brightwey on the north, extending to the watercourse on the east.

1335. Reginald Wychampton called atte Rydedore brother and heir of John atte Rydedore conveys to Walter atte Berghe his corner tenement in Brounestrete called le Rydedore situate West of Blackebrigge.

1392. John atte Berghe grants the tenement called le Rydedore to John Chaundler citizen of N.S. &c.

In 1400 Henry IV. granted licence to John Chaundler to assign two messuages (one of which was called Rydedore), fifteen cottages, and four shillings annual rent, amounting to the yearly value of sixty-seven shillings and four pence, to Adam Teffont, Mayor of New Sarum, and master of the Trinity Hospital, and to his successors in the same office. This licence recites a prior grant from Henry IV. to Adam Teffont permitting him to purchase lands and tenements for the use of the Hospital to the amount of twenty pounds yearly; it rates the lands and tenements assigned by John Chaundler as making one hundred shillings of that sum.

1410. The Trinity Hospital accounts (2 Henry IV.) inform us that the corner tenement in which Richard Pole dwelt was "de novo edificatum constructum & erectum. In carpentaria lathamina tegulis, zabulo, and all necessarys," at a cost of xxiiiij marks. 1411 (12 Henry IV.) Johannes Gobyn 'p tenemento quod Ricus Pole tenuit cum cotagio xvj s. per annum."

1455. William Swayne (Mayor) pays rent of Assize to the Bishop for a tenement lately Clement Rawlins in New Street called "le Sterr." (Bishop Beauchamp's Liber Niger, translated by the Rev. E. R. Nevill, F.S.A.)

In 1460 Roger Pye was granted a lease of the Star Inn, and we learn that after his death in 1475 a short lease of five years was granted by the Master of Trinity Hospital to Nicholas Hale of three tenements in Brown Street, one of which is called the Star (These tenements are described as in the tenure of Roger Marsh, tanner, and Dionysia Pye, widow), by the rent of one red rose paid at the Nativity of Saint John the Baptist.

From this date the records of the Trinity Hospital give a complete list of the tenants of this inn down to the present day.
TARENT’S INN (later The Angel), HIGH STREET.

This inn was on the west side of High Street to the south of Pynnok’s Inn. It appears to have been the house that became the Angel Inn during the XV. century, and as such continued until the year 1762, when it ceased as an inn, and was occupied by Edward Whatmore, a builder or merchant, who converted the courtyard and stables into a timber-yard. The property is now divided into two shops and houses (42 and 44, High Street), in the occupation of Mr. Turner and Mr. Harrison.

1410. Thomas Castleton, mercer, grants to Thomas Chafyn, cardmaker of Warmynstre, at the then rent of one rose, the reversion of a tenement which Robert Redyng holds for his life, situate in Ministrestret between Pynnok’s Inn on the north . . . and Roger Tarent’s on the south. In 1411 the tenement to the south of Redyng’s is granted in fee to Thomas Chafyn, cardmaker, by William Doudyng; and six years later reference is made to an inn called Tarente’s Inn, bounded on either side by the ten’ts of Thomas Chafyn, cardmaker of Warminster, on the west side of Ministrestret which is called “hyestret.” As far as can be ascertained the inn first appears as The Angel in 1455. Bishop Beauchamp’s Liber Niger of that date shows rent of assize from “Sir John Wallop, collector of the revenue of the Vicars of the Cathedral Church of Sarum, for a tenement in High Street called ‘le Angel.’” John Hall is named as master or landlord in 1624, and Mr. Mill in 1742—53. The Bath stage coach started from the Angel in 1751 in opposition to that from the Oxford Arms in Catherine Street. The landlord of the Angel, William Long, became bankrupt in 1761; his stock and furniture were sold off in the following year, and the house was let to a builder. In 1768 the premises were advertised for sale, and described as "the dwelling and timber yard of Mr. Edward Whatmore in High Street, formerly the Angel Inn."

THE ROSE INN (afterwards The Rose and Crown Inn, at present The Crown Hotel), HIGH STREET.

In 1411 John Goweyn gave to the Procurator and Commonalty of the Church of the Blessed Mary of Sarum a certain inn or tenement called "le Rose" in Ministrestret. (Inquisitio ad quod damnum.) In 1423 John Chafyn, cardmaker of Warminster, granted to John Paule, "forbour," a tenement in High Street between one called "le Rose" and that of Lawrence Broun on the north.

1455 (Bishop Beauchamp's Liber Niger), "from Sir John Wallop, collector of the revenue of the Vicars of the Cathedral Church of Sarum, for a tenement called 'le Rose in the old part of Mynstrestrete.'" The records of the Tailors' Guild (1470) refer to the Crown Inn, High Street; and it is of interest to notice that in 1624 a new house appeared in Bridge Street called "The Rose," which was an inn of considerable importance, with stabling for 30 horses; after which the name of the old inn in High Street would seem to have been changed to the Rose and Crown. The accounts of the Corporation Brew-house, to which reference will be made, show that John Morrys, of the Rose and Crown, High Street, bought from the Corporation during the 10 months ending March 26th, 1625, 2 hogsheads and 1 barrel of beer, and 6 Couls of Ale. The house was offered for sale in 1785, when it was stated to be held under the Vicars of the Cathedral. At this house was established, in 1824, Lodge 102, Ancient Order of Druids.

THE LAMB INN (later The Holy Lamb and The Sun and Lamb), HIGH STREET.

This inn was at the south-east corner of New Street and High Street, the house now known as Mitre House; it probably also included the two adjoining houses in High Street. Mitre House is said to occupy the site on which the first house was built in Salisbury, and in which Bishop Poore is said to have lived during the building of the Cathedral. Probably this accounts for its having become customary for the Bishop of Salisbury to robe there before proceeding to his enthronisation at the Cathedral.*

Bishop Beauchamp's Liber Niger (1455) shows a payment (rent of assize) by "John Russell for a tenement in High Street called 'le Lambe,' near the gate of the Close there."

In 1620 Thomas Snook is mentioned as tenant of the "Holie Lambe" in High Street. Reference is also made in 1649 to Edward Willis of the

* See Wordsworth's Processions and Ceremonies, p. 127 note.
"Lambe" Inn, High Street, and in 1742 to Edward Kensington of the "Sun and Lamb," High Street. In 1760 the house was advertised to be let either as an inn or as a private residence. It was then the property of Walter Long, a retired draper, who lived in the house now occupied by Mrs. Roberts (Close Gate House).

"On the occasion of the enthronement of Bishop Barrington in 1782, it was stated that the Mayor and Corporation accompanied his lordship to the corner house in High Street, heretofore the Sun and Lamb. In 1791, on the entry of Bishop Douglas, it is again described as late the Sun and Lamb; and in 1807 Bishop Fisher is stated to have robed at Mr. Lacy's house, formerly the Sun and Lamb. With the exception of being opened for a short time as the Mitre Coffee Rooms, it has remained a private house and shop ever since" (Wheeler).

"COUNTEWELLES" INN, HIGH STREET.

This inn appears to have stood on the site now occupied by the premises of Mr. Samuel Grove. The house is referred to in connection with Pynnok's Inn as the tenement of Geoffry of Warminster, who was Mayor in 1335.

September, 1416. "Reginald de Kyngesbrugge heir of Geoffry de Werministre, grants in fee the tenement called 'Countewelles' Inn situate in High Street called 'Ministrestrete' between a trench of water running between the same and Pynnokes Inn on the south." Probably this trench conveyed water from the river to the open channel in High Street, but it is seen by the grant of William, son of John Knoyle, that in 1345 a larger stream was thought expedient, and that the City then bought a strip of land for the purpose of making the (New Canal) ditch, which commenced just below Fisherton Bridge and ran under the premises of the "Ramme Inn."

1455, a rent of assize is paid for a tenement in High Street called "Countewalis Inne." The name of the house may have been changed in 1474 to the Cup Inn, as the following entries in the City ledgers appear to refer to property occupying the same situation as did Countewelles Inn, viz., on the north of the Helme or Pynnok's Inn. Edward Cheyne, who was chosen alderman in 1474, is described as of the "Apud le Cowpe" in High Street, and there is an entry which refers to a tenement in High Street "between le Helme on the south and that of Edward Cheyne called le Cowpe on the north." This tenement may have been part of the ancient Pynnok's Inn converted into a separate tenement when the houses were altered and re-named as The Helme.

THE BLUE BOAR INN, MARKET PLACE.

This hostelry, which stood on the site now occupied by some of the shops of Messrs. Style and Gerrish in the Blue Boar Row, may have received its name from the ancient name of the place or chequer in which it was built. The late Mr. H. J. F. Swayne, in his notes before alluded to, says "I am of opinion that the 'Blue bore' was so named from the iron door of a prison formerly existing there, as in the cases of the Blue bore at Oxford, the Brown bore at Wilton, and, notwithstanding Nichols' story, the Blue bore at Leicester." The inn was either built or re-built for William Ludlow in 1444, as in an indenture dated 1444 for building W. Ludlow's house (Wilts Arch. Mag. XV. 330) it is described as "within the Boor against the Market-place," and at a later date the deed was endorsed "in the blew bore." Bishop Beauchamp's Liber Niger, 1455, shows rent of assize received "from William Ludlow for his Inn called 'Boore,' formerly Thomas Burford's." The Blue Boar Inn, when at its prime, must have been an extensive hostelry, with a large courtyard extending to "Chepparestrete."* Tradition assigns this yard as the scene of the execution of the Duke of Buckingham in 1483, but great uncertainty seems always to have prevailed as to the spot where this unfortunate nobleman was beheaded. One authority says "he was beheaded on a new scaffold in the Market-place," which certainly appears more probable, as the object of King Richard, who was no fool, would have been to strike terror into a disaffected city, which Salisbury had proved itself to be during the preceding year. In 1484 William Boket, Maior, and Roger Holes were appointed wardens for looking after the streets "from the bore corner and all the dich to the Tabard, the fisshrow, the bocherow and so on to the brigge of ssidaberton called the upper brigge." The register of Saint Edmund's, Sarum, contains a record of the burial of J. Battye of the Blew Bore, Nov. 30, 1571. The masters or tenants of the Blue Boar Inn appear to have been Gervis Batter in 1620, Mr. Read 1721, and Robert Read in 1730, but during the early part of the XVIII. century the Three Lions Inn became the principal hotel in the City. This inn stood at the south-west corner of Winchester Street, on the site occupied by what was formerly Pinckney's Bank, and included the adjoining house in the Market Place. Mr. Gast, who became the proprietor of the Three Lions about 1757, also carried on another large inn, the Greyhound, immediately behind the Three Lions (the premises now occupied by the Young Men's Christian Association), extending to Brown Street, which had stabling for 70 or 80 horses. From this time the ancient Blue Boar Inn rapidly declined, and at the beginning of the XIX. century Dr. Fowler built himself a house on a portion of the site, which he occupied until 1819—20. The house was then taken by a society, established under the presidency of Bishop Fisher, which opened the upper part of the premises as the "Salisbury and Wiltshire Library and Reading Rooms," and converted the lower part into a shop, and it may be of interest to notice that this shop was let in 1825 to Mr. William Fawcett. Mr. Fawcett, who had been assistant to Mr. Pinckney, the leading draper in the City, during the preceding ten years, then opened a business of his own. Six years later he became Mayor of Salisbury, and on August 26th, 1833, his son, Henry Fawcett, who became Postmaster-General in 1880, was born in this house. The statue of Henry Fawcett, by Pinker, is erected facing the site of the Blue Boar Inn.

THE ROYAL, HIGH STREET.

The situation of this house is doubtful, but the Corporation records show that a bridge crossed the ditch from High Street to the Canal, and therefore it may have been the original name of the inn that stood on the site of the present Assembly Rooms, and known during the XVIII. century as "The Fountain Tavern." An Assembly Room, patronised by the best people for balls, concerts and dinners, was attached to the Fountain, and the wine cellars of Messrs. Large and Co. are supposed to have formed a part of the same inn.

The Chamberlain's roll for 1453 shows the receipt of 4/11 for old timber sold from the bridge towards "le Ryall" in High Street, and a payment of 2/6 to Robert Carpenter and a man for making the "Comon Trench" in High Street (Summo Vico) opposite "le Ryol," and 12d. for hyrdelles, and 2/- for a cartload of "hethe," and 10/- for 30 load of gravel for the same bridge, also 12d. for the carraige of the timber for the trench in High Street (Summo Vico) opposite "le Ryolle."

In 1455 a rent of assize was paid by John att Bergh for a hospice in High Street called "Le Robe" (? le Ryole). During the years 1396 to 1455 mention is made of the following names, some of which probably refer to inns and others to tradesmen's signs:—

1396. "Hatterestaverne in Mynsterstrete, which is called Castelstrete" (Tropenell Cartulary).
1414. "le Draggon Saynte Martynstre" (Will of Ric' Spencer).
1450. "le Tabard," opposite the Market.*

The following regulations and orders respecting brewers are extracted from the Corporation Ledgers:

1550, November 10th. "It is agreed that no brewer within this citie nor other from the 18th day of this present monthe of November, whiche day Mr Meyor shall make his proclamation, shall sell noo maner of ale above one peny the galon accordyng to Mr Meyor's proclamation untyll suche tyme that Mr Meyor and the Justices shall take any order for the same. And that bere of the bestshalbe solde noo derer then xx d. the barell, and mylde bere for xviii d. the barell, and syngle bere xiv d the barell and no derer."—4 Edw. VI.

2 quarters of oats.
1550—1, March 18.—"It is agreed that all brewers, whiche nowe at this present tyme dothe brewe, shall not at any tyme hereafter leave off brewyng and begyn agen; for if they doo, evere of them shall forfeite to the chamber 10 li. in money to be leyved of theire goodes and catalles."—5 Edw. VI.

1556, May 22.—"Forasmoche as it is apparante to the hoole house that John Eyre hathe offended in brewyng of stronge ale, and that he hathe forfeited 10 li., as is menc'oned in the Acte made in the tyme of Mr. Christopher Chaffyn then beyng Maior, yet nevertheless by cause he is an honest man, and dyd confesse his saide fault and submytted hymselfe unto the order of this house, it is therefore nowe ordered by the hoole assente of the same, that the said John Eyre shall paye in hande for his said offence unto the Chamberlaynes of this Citie to be by them used and employed abowte the repara'con and amendement of the Market place of the same Citie, where most nede shalbe, 40s., and that Maister James Andrewes, Mayor, for the sellynge of oone Cowle of strong ale shall pay in hande to the use afore-saide 5s. . . . 1564—5, January 15.—“It is agreede, concluded and determined that from and after this present day no bruer of ale or bere within this Citie brewinge, shall brewe any ale or bere above the rate confirmed and ratified in the tymes of the Maioraltye of Mr. William Kent and Mr. Christopher Chafyn, that is to say, ale at 1\( \frac{1}{4} \)d. the gallon the best sorte; and of the seconde sorte of ale 1d. the gallon; and bere at the rate ensuingle viz. 20d. the barrell the best sorte, and 14d. the barrell of the seconde sorte &c. &c. . . . And for the full execu'con herof it is agreede that the constables of this Citye shall have power to serche for the contrary, and to give information to Mr. Maior, that due execution may be had.”—7 Elizabeth.

1623, July 28.—“Inn-keepers and others suffering players to play in their houses back sides or courtes after seaven of the clocke in the afternoone shall loose and forfeyte to this Corpora'con to and for the use of the poore of this Cittye, for every such offence 40s.”—21 Jac. I.

In 1612, after the City had received the Charter of James I., the Corporation revoked the constitutions of all the Companies, and in the following year each of them, with the exception of the Company of Brewers, were re-constituted, and their new orders were sanctioned by the Corporation and ratified by the seal of the Mayor. But the brewers, ignoring an order made by the Corporation “that all crafts and trades should form themselves into companies,” did not submit their draft orders to the Council until July, 1615.

“1615, July 21. Henry Pearson Mayor. At this Counclelle the orders from the Companye of Brewers were examyned and allowed, and yt is agreede the same orders may be engrossed and afterwards sealed by Mr. Mayor in the presence of anye of this Companye.”
THE BREWERS' ORDERS MADE VOID.

Owing to some disagreement between the brewers and the Corporation, these orders were not sealed, and the brewers do not appear to have taken any further steps in the matter until 1622. In that year a proposal was made in the Council that a common brewhouse should be established by the Corporation, and that the profits from the same should be devoted to the relief of the poor in the City and to the maintenance of the Workhouse in Winchester Street, that had been started in 1564 "to holde and sett to worke idell people soe that ther shall none which be hable to worke that shalbe suffred to go idelly abrode in begginge." This proposal was resisted by the brewers, six of whom, including Robert Jole, an alderman, were members of the Corporation, and at a meeting of the Council which was held in the following month (August) the brewers, in self-defence, again applied to have their orders sealed. The minutes of this meeting are not entered in the ledger, but the report of a later meeting shows that the application was refused —

"5th January, 1622—3.—At this Councelle yt is ordered and agreed that a former order made in Mr. Henry Pearson's yeare videlt the 21st daye of Julye in the XIII. yeare of the Kinges Ma'ties raigne that nowe is of Englande &c. . . . touchinge the incorpora'con of the Brewers of this Cittye, is nowe frustrated and made void, and whereas at a com'on Councill holden in August last yt was agreed by the greatest number of voyces that the orders then preferred for the incorpora'con of the saide brewers should not be allowed or sealed, which order was not then entered in the ledger, but is nowe at this Councill confirmed."

In the following November Robert Jole, who had three months previously declined to serve the office of Mayor and had paid his fine, begged his colleagues to remit the fine and elect him as Mayor, and to reassure those who suspected that he would use his position, if elected, to hinder the erection of the brewhouse, he declared that he wished prosperity to such a good work, &c. Jole was elected Mayor on 2nd November, 1623, and a Council meeting was summoned to meet on the 1st January to take a final vote respecting the brewhouse. Jole locked the door of the Council House, and so prevented the meeting being held, but the Council succeeded in holding a meeting on the 17th of the same month, at which a vote was taken upon the subject, viz.:—

"Att this Councell it was putt to the question whether the brewhowse shall stand or be putt downe, and it was tryed by balles and Thirtie seaven voyces were that yt shall stand, and eighte voyces was on the other side. Whereupon it is nowe ordered that from henceforthe that yt be not directlie moved to that purpose againe. But yt anye will move for the good of the chamber touchinge the said brewhowse lett them putt yt in writings and delyver yt in the Councell to Mr. Maior."

After his appointment as Mayor, Robert Jole became the chief opponent of the brewhouse undertaking, and on September 11th, 1626, he was suspended from the Corporation. The charges that were brought against him fill several pages in the ledger, and his conduct appears to have been so outrageous that the following abbreviated extracts may be of interest:—

"1626, September 11.—At this Counsell Mr. Robert Jole an Alderman of this Cittye was uppon the question suspended of beinge an alderman or assistant or of beinge of this Companye or Corpora'con, and for cominge to the Counsells of this Cittye, or to have any place in this Companye untill their shalbe order made for his calling to the contrarye. And the causes of his suspen'con havinge byn sumarylye towched uppon this day, shalbe sett downe and putt into writinge, and to be entred as of this Counsell after they shalbe perused and allowed at the next Counsell . . . And are written in fol. 329" as follows. "The causes and reasons for which the suspension of Mr. Robert Jole was made. Whereas the saide Robert Jole since the granting of the Charter to the Cityye by our late Sou'aigne Lord Kinge James, videlt. the XIII. daye of Marche in the IX. yeare of the raigne &c. &c. . . . did take this oathe followinge, videlt. I Robert Jole doe willinglye sweare that I will from henceforth the uttermoste of my power maynteyne and defend the liberties and privileges of this Cityye men'coned in the Charter . . . and will from tyme to tyme performe all orders made . . . for the good governmente and profitt thereof . . . soe neer as God shall give me grace, soe helpe me God. And he took also the oathe of Assistant, and afterwardes videlt, the seconde daye of March the XVIII. yeare of the saide Kinge he was elected Alderman and took the oathe of an Alderman. Afterwards he Robert Jole on the XXVIII. Julye in the XXI. yeare of the said Kinge James did make suite to be spared from beinge named to be putt to the ele'con of Maioraltie of this Cityye for V. yeares, and thereupon offered to geve XX li. to the Cityye for a fyne for that privilege, which was yielded unto in his favour by the Com'on Councell. But there beinge an order in the Councell made the VI. daye of June in the XXI. yeare of Kinge James for the erectinge of a Com'on Brewhowe at the charge of the chamber of the Cityye for the relyeffe of the poore of the Cityye, which was made in his presence and by the consente of five or sixe brewers who were of the same Councell. The saide Robert Jole shortlye afterwardes, viz. the seconde of November . . . which was the day for the ele'con of the Maior . . . made erneste suite that notwithstandinge his saide order gotten as aforesaide to be spared for five yeares from that office, that the saide fine might be remitted and that he might be then named and putt to the ele'con to be Maior. But yt beinge doubted by some that he might by suche meanes hinder the erectinge of the Com'on Brewhowe . . . which was then in good forwardness and almooste ready. He pressed publickly in the face of the Councell that he wished all prosperitie to that good worke, and in token thereof desired that God would deale soe with his soul as he intended the good of the newe brewhowe, Upon which his desire and erneste protesta'con his fyne was remitted, and he was named and putt to the question and chosen Maior, and thereupon he took the oathe of Maior which oathe appeareth in the beginninge of this booke, videlt. Ye shall as farr fourth as ye cann or maye keepe and governe the Kinges people of this Cityye to lyve in peace from all manner of ryotts Conventicles and Insurrec'ons againste the Kinges peace &c. . . . Butt beinge gotten into the office of Maior, he presentlye neglected his said protesta'con and all his saide oathes, and made an open declarara'con of hymselfe to be an utter enemye to the saide brewhowse erected for the poore, and protested then with many oathes and muche furye that he would overthrow the brewhowse yf he could, and hath the sitheence used many unlawfull praetices to the dishonor and prejudice of this Cittye and contrarye to his oathes, as namelye.

Firste he beinge of a moste furious and fierye nature did presentlye after his entringe into his Mayoraltie become soe harshe, and behaved hymselfe soe furiouslye, and soe rudelye and uncivillye at the Com’on Councell . . . that the Councell was much troubled . . . by reason thereof, and the affayres of the Cittye . . . receyved thereby very great prejudice.

2. He used at the Com’on Counscells duringe his Maioraltie and ever since fowle and uncivill language to his brethren the Aldermen . . . and to other of the Assistants there, using to many of the Aldermen in reproache the word (thou). And at an Assemblye of the Justices and auncients of this howse, he called Mr. Robert Banes an alderman and a justice of the peace (fwoole).

3. He was of soo violenta a carriadge and soo furious duringe his Maioraltie that when he hadd called for any of the justices of the peace to attend at the Counscell Howse for the service of his Maiestie, maney of them durst not come into the room to hym single, but would walk withoute untill some other of their fellow justices had come to go into his presence with them, for fear of beinge assaulted by hym.

4. A Com’on Counscelle being lawfullye warned to be at the Counscell Howse uppon the firste day of January, Anno XXI. Jacobi Regis, in the tyme of his Maioraltie and all the aldermen and Com’on Counscell beinge accordinglye come to the howse to enter there, Robert Jole beinge there, did in a violent manner keepe faste the door of the Counscell Howse and kepte away the keyes thereof, and would not suffer them to enter thereunto to holde the Counscell and soo utterlye disappointinge the holding thereof.

5. XXI. Julii, 13 Jacobi Regis, in Mr. Pearson’s Maioraltie their beinge an order that the brewers . . . should be a company and should have their orders sealed, but the brewers neglectinge to prosecute the same did for seaven yeares next after and more, forbear to draw themselves into anye companye or to have their orders under seale, and soo totally rejected and refused the benefit of the said orders, and yet afterwardees vicesimo Jacobi Regis when Mr. Squibb was Maior the Com’on brewhowse beinge by the full consent of the Councell ordered to be erected for the relyeffe of the poore, the brewers to hinder the settinge upp and prosperity thereof did move in a Com’on Councell that they might have the benefit of the said orders, and wished them to be a companye, but their motion was denied by the Councell by voyces, and the former orders were then resolved to be utterlye void. But afterwarde in the next year when Mr. Jole was Maior (he knowing that Mr. Bee who kept one of the keyes of the Cheaste wherein the Seale was kepte, was ymployed in erneste business of the Cittye at that tyme and could not then come to the howse) gott the saide key from hym by a false message sent by Mr. Jole to Mr. Bee, and then the said Mr. Jole did in the presence of a few others, cause the Com’on Scale to be sett to the orders of the Brewers for the confirmation of the same, notwithstanding he well knew that the same orders had been made voyde by the voyces of the Com’on Councell, he hymselfe and all or moste of the brewers of the companye beinge present at the Counsell when yt was soe resolved, which acte was manifestlye contrarye to his oathes, and to the greate damage of the Cittye.

6. In the tyme of his Maioraltie not long before the end of his office, he was much distempered with drinke, and in the night tyme about eighte of the clocke he was getting towardest Mr. Hornes house, he beinge at Gaunts Kyve which is the filthie myrey diche that runneth throughe the Greyhounde,* coulde not gett over the bridge there, but fell into the same gutter and getting out with much adoe, he, thinkinge to go over the stubbles went through the river and then went into Mr. Hornes howse at the back dore of his howse.

7. He the day or twое before the end and expira’con of his Maioraltie did of his owne auicularite, beinge only assisted by Mr. Horne and without the assente or consent of any Com’on Counsell, admit and sweare dyverse persons (videlt.) Lawrence Horne Junr. who had byn an apprentice in London, Thomas Hancock Junr., John Pearson and Thomas Sevyer to be free citizens of this Cittye contrarye to the Charter and his said oathe.

8. In his Maioraltie or very shortly after, he did in the night tyme about eleven of the clocke lye in the open streate to meet and assault and beat Mr. Robert Norwell an alderman . . . who married the mother of the said Mr. Jole, and did then meet hym and assualt hym in such sort that . . . Mr. Norwell feared to repayre to his own howse and gott into the howse of Thomas Lawes and there stayed the night, and Mr. Joles lay wayte again for his comying home all that night to have again assaulted hym to the great trouble and raysinge of the inhabitants oute of their beds, and the breach of the peace and dishonour of the Cittye.

9. A little before the tearme of St. Hillarye Anno primo Caroli Regis, he being an alderman of this Cittye took on him the office of a Baylye arrant and served Mr. Coward then a new man of this Cittye with process to enforce the Maior and Commonaltie of the Cittye to appear and answer a suite by quo warranto in the Kings Benche touchinge sundry liberties by them pretended to be challenged to the dishonour of the place of an alderman &c. . . . He also procured an injunction Quo Warranto to be exhibited in the Kings Bench touchinge the brewhouse whereby he charged the Maior and Corpora'con with many false and slanderous things &c.”

This long standing dispute was settled in 1626. The ledger contains a report of “A treaty pending with Mr. Attorney General and Mr. Noy, of Lincoln’s Inn, relative to the matters in dispute respecting Mr. Alderman Jole . . . he being admitted, and Mr. Thomas Hancock, Mr. Richard Payne, Mr. Robert Norwell, alderman, Mr. Edward Fawconer, and also Mr. William Windover and Mr. John Dove; two other brewers being present, it was agreed that all matters in dispute between the Corporation and the brewers touching the Common brewhouse be referred to the award of Mr. Mayor, Mr. Recorder and fourteen others (whose names follow), and, in default of their arriving at a settlement of the matter, that it be referred to the arbitrement of Sir Robert Heath, Attorney General, and William Noy, of Lincoln’s Inn.”

The Common brewhouse was in Rolleston Street opposite the present Old George Brewery, and eight of the aldermen, including Mr. Bee, who was chosen chief and treasurer, were appointed to manage the undertaking. This Committee appear to have converted several tenements which already belonged to the Corporation into a brewhouse. The accounts of the undertaking are contained in six ledgers marked "Brewhouse Accounts," but the most interesting of the records is to be found in an old book in parchment covers, which contains the minutes of the Committee. On the first folio of this book there appears an extract from the Council minutes of a meeting which was held on the 26th January, I. Charles I., viz.:

"The Voyces that the Brewhouse may be confirmed by Acte of Parliam'nt are XLII., and the voyces on the contrarye parte are tenn. Therefore yt is nowe ordered and agreeed, That the Brewhouse in this Cittye shalbe confirmed by Acte of Parliam't at the nexte Parliam't yt it maye be hadd and obteyned."

The first name on the “Noat” represents Henry Sherfield, a bencher of Lincoln’s Inn, a resident in St. Edmund’s parish, who was appointed Recorder of Salisbury in 1623. He is well known for the proceedings against him in the Star Chamber, of which an account is given in Hatcher, p. 371 and seq., "for after obtaining the consent of the vestry, destroying a certain painted glass window in his parish church." Of the other names in the "Noat," those with the prefix Mr. refer to members of the Corporation, the first seventeen being aldermen, many of whom had served the office of Mayor. There were at this time over 100 innkeepers and alehouse-keepers in Salisbury, and the list informs us that only 18 of them took beer and ale from the Common brewhouse. The Committee, in their first report to the Council, state that the brewhouse did not yield much profit, and it was probably due to this report that the Corporation settled their differences with the brewers, and passed a resolution that all innkeepers and alehouse-keepers "shall be summoned to attend next Council to be treated touchinge theire takinge some of theire beer of the brewhouse."

* Cowl—a vessel in which water is carried on a pole between two (Johnson).

The next document, which appears to be a memorandum of one of the officials, contains a list of the names of 40 publicans who were present at the above-mentioned Council meeting, and also the names of their houses.

The author has endeavoured to supply from other sources the names of the streets in which these inns were situated, and also a list of other inns in the City for which licences were granted during the years 1635 to 1685.

Early in the next century, viz., in December, 1708, the Corporation were of opinion that the large number of alehouses in the City constituted "an evil seriously and generally felt." The result of this resolution was that during the next two years a considerable number of alehouse licences were refused, after which the Town Council passed a vote of thanks to the Mayor and Magistrates for reducing the number of such licences in the City to 40, which the Corporation considered sufficient for the accommodation of the public. The following list of the names of public houses for which licences were granted in Salisbury during the XVIII. century is compiled from the Corporation records and other sources. It shows that, in addition to the 40 alehouses, there were over 50 inns established in the City during this period, many of them being important hostelries and coaching houses. It will be noticed that there are more than 40 names of alehouses included in the list, but in those days it was not an uncommon thing for a new tenant to change the name of a house when he took possession, so that the same house may appear under two or three different names during a period such as that included in the list.

MILFORD INNS.

1710. The Punchbowl, Shady Bower, ceased to be an inn about 1824, when it became the private residence of Alderman Walter Goddard. Mr. Hamilton Fulton is now (1911) the tenant of the property, the freehold of which belongs to the Wyndham family.

1775. The Blue Post, Milford, is referred to as the Cheesecake House. In 1777 it was offered for sale, the tenant at that time being James Hayter, who succeeded Edward Bloom in 1775. The house, which at present is occupied by Miss Style, is now called “Donhurst,” Milford Hollow.

The Travellers’ Rest, Milford. This is said to have been the house which at present is the residence of the Vicar of Laverstock.

In addition to the three important Fisherton inns that are included in the previous list, viz., The White Horse, The Sun, and The Bull, there were the following licenced houses in this parish which at that time was not within the City of Salisbury:—

1760. The Cross Keys (now the King’s Arms), Mr. Oak.

1796. Lord Malmesbury’s Arms.
THE JOINERS' HALL, ST. ANN STREET.
CHAPTER XVI.

THE JOINERS.

This Guild, originally called the Carpenters' Guild, is referred to in the Salisbury Corporation Ledger as early as 1440. It then included "Carpynters, Bowiers, Coupers, Masones, Hellyers, Lymbners, fletchers, and Skynnerns." In 1475 and on many subsequent occasions the Carpenters' Guild supplied armed men for the King's forces, but very little information respecting the Guild appears in the Corporation records during the XV. and XVI. centuries, except an occasional reference in connection with various assessments that were made on the crafts and others in the City during that period. After the orders of the ancient Craft Guilds were revoked in the reign of Elizabeth, they were re-constituted as Trade Companies. We then find a reference to the "Joyners" Company, which included carpenters. The Joiners' Company received new orders in 1613. These were cancelled in December, 1616, and fresh constitutions were granted by the Mayor and Corporation in April, 1617. The original, on parchment, of these 1617 orders has recently been presented to the Town Council by Mr. R. A. Wilson (the present Mayor of Salisbury, 1911):—"Civitas Novae Sarum. Orders and Con- stitutions for the Companye of the Joyners, Whellers, Worsteed Makers, Bookbinders, Carpenters, Millwrightes, Coopers, Free Masons, Rough Masons, Paynters, Instrumente Makers, Ropers, Turners, Saweyers, and Billowe-makers, within the Cittye of Newe Sarum had made and agreed upon at a Com'он Councell of the saide Cittye there holden by the Maior and Com'ynaltye of the saide Cittye the eighte and twentieth day of Aprill in the fifteenth yeare of the raigne of our Soueraigne Lorde James by the grace of God Kinge of England, ffrance and Ireland &c. and of Scotlande the fiftith Annoq d'ni 1617.''

According to their new regulations a joiner might practise carving, but on no account was a carpenter to make anything belonging to the trade of a joiner:—"It shall be lawfull for all and every person which is a freeman of this Company and have served out their apprenticeship in the art or mystery of a joyner to use and exercise all and every the arts and mysteries of joyning, carving, inlaying and such turninge as such joyners do use, and as they shall have been brought up to within this Cittie."

Their officers, viz., two Wardens, one Chamberlain, two Stewards, one Clerk and one Yeoman, were to be elected on their feast day, which was ordered to be kept on "Monday se'nnight after the ffeast of Saint Michael-the-Archangel."

Almost all the domestic buildings of the period up to the end of the Stuart Monarchy were built principally of wood, and, therefore the joiners' and carpenters' industry was a large and flourishing one. Ditchfield says "The carpenter appears to have been the head of the allied trades—joiners, carpenters, sawyers, planers, &c. He it was who made the contract for the woodwork of the building to be erected. He reserved the roof for his own work, and usually employed the others as his subordinates; but cupboards, bedsteads, tables, chairs, and carving fell within the province of the joiner, and 'rayles, sealinge-boardes, wainscotte clappboardes and beddtymber' were his raw material. There are many old tables and other products of his skill remaining which are still the delight of the connoisseur.

There appears to have been frequent disputes respecting the limits of several trades included in this Company. Complaints were made that the workmen of one trade undertook the work of another, and that capitalists of one trade gave work or "sett on" the journeymen of another trade, that the bricklayer, or the carpenter, included painting in his estimate of a job; that a brewer furnished the timber and the workshop, and "sett on" a number of coopers to make his barrels. These disputes were referred to the Mayor and Corporation, and orders were made that a brewer was not to exercise the trade of a cooper, but that he might re-hoop or mend his great vessels.

A complaint made by the turners against the joiners and carpenters was referred to the Corporation for settlement. The result of this appeal appears in the Ledger on December 15th, 1621, and is as follows:—"That uppon conferense had between the carpenters, joyners and turners, that the trade occupacion or misterye of a plompe-maker doth onlye belong unto a turner, and not to a carpenter or joyner, also yt is further conceyued that at the next com'on Counsell, the company of Carpenters shall or may be severed from the company of joyners."

Owing to the continued disputes between the various trades in this Company, the Corporation
 issued an order in 1622 “That the company be mended, Joyners, Paynters, Ropemakers, bookebynders, to be of one companye; and the carpenters and others to be of the other companye.”

Apparently their differences were amicably arranged, as in 1675, when the Company again received new orders, it included the same trades as did the 1617 orders, with the addition of bricklayers and plumbers.

Below will be found the accounts of the Chamberlains of the Joiners’ Company from 1615 to 1622:

As before stated the two Wardens of this Company were elected on the annual feast day and served the office for one year. A MS. which is affixed to the foregoing Chamberlain's accounts (which is probably of about the same date) contains the names of thirteen members who were nominated for this office, and also the number of votes recorded for each.

The ancient meeting place or hall of this fraternity may have been in St. Edmund's parish. The accounts of the Churchwardens of this parish before the time of the Reformation show that the Carpenters' and Joiners' Guild made offerings upon their Guild festival at St. Edmund's Church. Some time after the suppression of the Chantries a new hall appears to have been erected for the Company in St. Martin's parish. This building, which was known as the "Joyners' Hall," was in Tanner Street, the present St. Ann Street. The St. Martin's Ward rate book for 1648 gives the assessment of twenty pounds ten shillings for the house and "Stocke of Furniture" (Company of Carpenters and Joyners).

This interesting old building is still in existence, its facade being characteristic of the Jacobean period, although the frontage has been divested of much of its antique appearance by the introduction of modern windows, whilst the interior has suffered by the removal of the most beautiful specimens of carving which it at one time contained. The interior of the large room in which the feasts of the Company were held, and which measured 29 feet long and 27 feet wide, presented one uniform surface of the most minute carving on panels, with Corinthian pillars. Hatcher, referring to this building, says:—"A flat arched door on each side of the ground floor leads, one to the hall, and the other to a tenement beneath, which possibly formed the dwelling of one of the officers. The hall itself is twenty-nine feet long by twenty-seven feet wide. It is fitted up with oak wainscot, richly carved and adorned with pilasters in the same taste. The fireplace exhibits an elaborate specimen of carving, consisting of pilasters, adorned with bunches of grapes. In the centre are the royal arms, within the garter, as borne by James the First. The Warden’s chain, on the right side of the fireplace, is decorated in the same style. In one of the windows is a shield of arms, in stained glass, Azure, a chevron between three lozenges Or, the bearing of the family of Hyde, so long inhabitants and benefactors of the city."*

The ornamental brackets which support the oriel without have been attributed to either Humphrey Beckham or to his brother, John Beckham, both of whom were born in Salisbury. Humphrey, the elder, was born in 1588, and we are told that he displayed, as a boy, a taste for modelling, and that, in consequence, he was apprenticed to a Mr. Rosgrave, a carver and gilder of the City, who was presumably a member of this Company. It is said that Humphrey Beckham in his early manhood displayed his talent as a sculptor and attracted much notice. There is no doubt that many of the elaborately-carved overmantels and other ornaments in carved wood, which are still to be found in some of the ancient houses in Salisbury, are the work either of Humphrey Beckham or of his brother John, both of whom were members of the Joiners’ Company, and, as will be seen from the accounts, each of them served the Company as Chamberlain, John in 1617 and Humphrey in 1621. A few years later they each occupied the chair as Warden of the Company.

The City Chamberlain’s account for 1634 shows a payment made by the Corporation to John Beckham of five pounds, in addition to thirty-seven pounds which had been previously paid to him, "for that he hath artificiallye set up ye waynscott and carved workes in the Counsell howse." We also learn from the St. Thomas' Churchwardens' accounts that Humphrey Beckham, joyner, was elected sidesman and assistant to the Churchwardens on April 18th, 1636. The same accounts show that there were many payments made to Humphrey Beckham for work he did at St. Thomas' Church; e.g., June 8th, 1656, "pay'd Humphrey Beckham for enlarging the canopie of ye pulpit £2 10s. 0d." May 18th, 1661, "Humphrey Beckham for worke removinge the pulpit, and for coveringe the new font £4 15s. 0d."

There is in the south porch of St. Thomas' Church a memorial in carved wood to Humphrey Beckham. This piece of sculpture in wood was originally fixed on the right side of the exterior of the great west door of the Church. It represents Abraham offering up Isaac, Jacob's dream, and other figures. The memorial bears the following inscription:—"Here underlyeth the body of Humphrey Beckham, who died the 2nd day of Feby., Anno 1671, aged 83 years. His own worke."

The Company of Joiners took part in the processions which formed part of the local Peace Celebrations in 1784, and again in 1815, but they were absent in 1832, when the rejoicings took place in consequence of the passing of the Reform Bill.

Their numbers had decreased, and in 1828 the few remaining members agreed to sell the Hall and garden. Among the loose MS. in the Salisbury Corporation Muniment Room is a stamped agreement:—“I, Mr. Henry Wapshare doth agree with my brother members to sell the Garden and the Hall called by the name of the Joiners’ Hall in the City of Salisbury, and that the money be shared by me Henry Wapshare, September 13th 1828—and by me John Footner, September 19th 1828.”

At last, in 1842, they were reduced to two members. However, these two representatives had given to them the place of honour immediately after the Mayor and Corporation in the procession connected with the festivities held in the City to celebrate the christening of his late Majesty King Edward VII. The following is taken from the account of this function which appeared in the Salisbury and Winchester Journal in January, 1842:—

“The usual procession was held, first the Mayor and Corporation, then came the Joiners’ Company, viz., the Master and the beadle, the only remaining members, the first bearing the Company’s banner, 115 years old, and the latter wearing the Company’s livery, a suit of clothes which first met the light some 212 years ago.”

The Salisbury Journal for October 15th, 1842, contains an interesting paragraph respecting the Joiners’ Hall, from which we quote the following:—

“Very considerable excitement and curiosity have prevailed here during the last few days, owing to the circumstance of the very ancient hall, called the Joiners’ Hall, situated in Tanners Street, now better known by the name of St. Ann’s Street, in this City, being taken possession of by certain parties acting under legal advice, with a view to prevent the premises being sold, and to re-instate the Joiners’ Company in its pristine state. . . . . The object of the Society was to protect and encourage trade, and from their very ancient records, the titles of their officers, their landed property, and their elegant hall, which combines so much chastity of design and beauty of workmanship, it is evident that their Corporation was of very considerable importance in the days of its prosperity, and though unfortunately of late years the frontage of the hall has been grievously divested of its antique appearance by the introduction of a modern window and the removal of the most beautiful specimens of carving from the interior, it still presents many monuments of days departed, when in princely style this fraternity held their annual assembly and banquet on the feast of St. Michael. With this brief preface it may be observed that some five years ago the last legal functionary, the Chamberlain, Abraham Scott, who was a very old man, died, since which period it has been in the possession of two persons, dividing between them the whole of the rents. In consequence, however, of a current report that the whole of the property was about to be sold, the son and heir of the late Chamberlain, a gentleman carrying on business as a builder in London, came to Salisbury for the purpose of exonerating himself from any responsibility; and from the original title deeds in his possession, together with a variety of documents lately brought to light, a gentleman of the legal profession here having advised him how to proceed so as to re-instate the Company, a general invitation was given to respectable tradesmen to attend the hall on Monday evening last to witness the taking possession and to elect fresh members, notice being given at the same time to the parties previously in possession. At seven o'clock several respectable people assembled, who expected considerable resistance on the part of the individuals holding the property. However, this did not take place; but as soon as they entered the Hall an oral notice of objection to the proceedings was given by Mr. Redway, who has been receiving the rents. Nevertheless, the ancient preliminaries having been gone through, the following tradesmen were initiated:—Mr. Charles Crouch, Mr. Charles Weavings, Mr. W. Safe, Mr. Nathaniel Lane, Mr. Joachim Lane, Mr. Thomas Witt, and Mr. John Ingram. An indenture of apprenticeship was exhibited from an aged gentleman named Rhoades, who, being a truly peaceable man, would not interfere, by which document it appears that he was apprenticed by the Company on March 25th, 1774, and it further appears that this gentleman was elected a member on the 9th of May following. Another document of great importance in the proceedings of the evening was accidentally presented by the above mentioned Mr. John Ingram to the meeting, by which it appears that he is positively the heir-at-law of the last surviving trustee (there having being four of them), and consequently it is said that he is justified in exercising a peculiar authority. We understand that the executors of the lately deceased broker, who rented the Hall, countenanced the proceedings that evening. On the part of Mr. Redway and the other persons who were or are in joint possession, it is contended that the whole of the new Company's proceedings were illegal, inasmuch as no parties were duly qualified to elect other members, unless they themselves were duly qualified as officers of the Company, and that they could not appoint themselves to offices; that they have not virtually taken possession, and that those persons who say they are members were not fully elected, as they have not their proper indentures on stamps. Be it as it may, there can be no doubt but that a Chancery suit will follow, and we understand that the original claimants, Messrs. Redway and Cookman, have applied for the rents, which are now just due, and intend immediately distraining if they be not forthcoming."

This ancient Hall was conveyed in 1850 by the above-named John Redway to Messrs. Griffin and Wolferstan and re-conveyed by them to Charles Trim and A. C. Rhoades, the latter being probably a descendant of the "truly peaceable man" Rhoades, before mentioned. The Hall was acquired in 1893 by Mr. Arthur Whitehead, and through the influence of the late Canon Swayne and Mr. Doran Webb the building was placed under the care of "The National Trust for Places of Historic Interest or Natural Beauty."

The accompanying illustration is from a photograph of Old Pewter Plate (now in the Salisbury Museum) which at one time belonged to the Salisbury Joiners' Company. The large covered mug (cover missing), which is 10 inches high, bears the inscription "William Areley, John Carpender then Wordens 1681." the maker's mark or touch is quite worn away.

worn, very little of the device being left, but the name Jo’ Angles 1672 is fairly distinct. The four hall-marks, struck with separate punches side by side on the face of the rim of each plate, are possibly the marks of the Salisbury Pewterers.

Mr. Arthur Whitehead has a small pewter beaker (unhandled) five inches high, which also belonged to the Salisbury Joiners’ Company. This piece has the letters, W.A. J.C. and the date 1681 engraved on its side, the maker’s mark being a small Fleur-de-lis.

It will be noticed that the date corresponds with that on the mug, and the letters are undoubtedly the initials of the two Wardens whose names appear on the larger piece.*

* Mr. Whitehead having been made acquainted with the above fact, at once presented the beaker to the Museum.
CHAPTER XVII.

THE BARBER SURGEONS.

One of the Guilds which is mentioned in the Corporation Ledger A (1440) included Barber Surgeons “Barbitons(ores), Warden, Nich(ol)as Wedgrove” and Cooks “Cocorum (coqui, or coci), Warden, Thomas Hurde.”

This Guild appears to have made their offerings at one of the altars in St. Thomas’ Church. Among the MSS. in the Civic Muniment Room is the will of John Wynchestre, barber (1458), who left his house, which is described as the corner tenement opposite the “pultricrosse,” to the Trinity Hospital, after the death of his wife Agnes, on condition that the Master and brothers of the said Hospital should hold his obit for his soul and for the soul of Agnes his wife on Friday in the first week in Lent in the Church of St. Thomas the Martyr, when they should pay to the priest and to the poor in that Church xx. pence to be equally divided amongst them; and also to the Wardens of the Fraternity of Barbers in the same City for their lights xii. pence.

In 1614 new orders and constitutions were granted by the Mayor and Corporation to the “Barber Chirurgions.”

On May 20, 1639. “Uppon the hearinge of the grievances of the company of Barber Chirurgions then preferred by peti’con unto the Com’on Councell, among other things, it was order’d that Mr. Henry Elliner of this cittie, Chirurgeon shall before St. Thomas’ day next procure himself to be admitted a free brother of the Company and Societie of Barber Chirurgeons, and in default thereof the said company are left at liberty to commence a Suite against him according to the orders and constitu'cons of the said company."

March 3, 1661. "At the peti'con of the Barber Chirurgeons a letter of Attorney is granted to five of their company em-powering them to recover and receive penalties incurred by breach of their orders and constitu'cons as granted by the Mayor and Com'ionaltie."

August 22, 1673. "At this meeting a letter of Attorney was passed under the Com'on Seale to the Companye of Barber Chirurgeons for the sueing of several persons for entreinge upon their liberties and privileges."

In 1675 the orders of all the Companies were revoked by the Mayor and Corporation. This Company, as re-constituted in 1676, included Barber Surgeons and Silk Weavers.

"Civitas Nove Sarum. Orders and Constitu'cons for the Company of Barbers, Chirurgeons and Silke Weavers within the City of New Sarum, had made and agreed upon at a Com'on Councell of the said citty there holden by the Mayor and Com'ionaltie of the said citty the eight and twentieth day of June in the eight and twentieth yeare of the raigne of our Soveraigne Lord Charles the Second by the grace of God of England Scotland France and Ireland Kinge defender &c. &c. governing of the saide Company as to them shall seeme best.

In witness whereof the said Mayor and Com’onaltie have hereunto sett their Com’on Scale of their Corpora’con the day and yeare first written, 1676.

It may be of interest to notice that the London barbers had a hall in Monkwell Street as early as 1381, and that when they obtained their Charter in 1462 they secured some curious privileges. One was exemption from service on juries—a privilege shared by members of the Cooks’ Company, revealing the respect of the Londoner for the institution of dinner. The London barbers had also the power of taking over the bodies of dead malefactors and dissecting them. As early as 1430 there was an anatomical theatre at their hall, where students attended lectures and demonstrations.

It was part of the duties of the Company’s beadles to go to Tyburn or Newgate and bring the bodies home in a coach. Not infrequently the mob pursued the coach with the grim freight, and broke the windows of Barbers’ Hall into the bargain. After a time the Company got files of soldiers from the City to guard their approaches on such occasions.
In virtue of these relations the hangman of the day felt he was entitled to a claim on the generosity of the Company at the season of cheerfulness and goodwill, as the accounts show. Here is one of the entries:

"Received, December 26, 1730, of the Governors of the Company, by the hands of Charles Bernard, their Clerk, 7s. 6d. for my Xmas Box.

"JOHN HOOPER, Executioner."
CHAPTER XVIII.

THE SMITHS.

This Guild is referred to in the Corporation Ledger as early as 1440. It then included "Gold-smythes, Blacksmythes, and Brayziers"; the names of the Wardens at that time being Walter Hende and John Perant. Another Guild at the same period included "Sadullers, Cotelers, Peurters, Pynners, and Cardmakers"; their Wardens being Stephen Waryn and John Cathero.

Each of these fraternities supplied armed men for the King's service upon several occasions between the years 1440 and 1480.

The following interesting petition from one of this Company is among the loose MSS. in the Salisbury Muniment Room (date 1595):—

"To the righte Wor'll the Maior and Co'mynaltie w'thin the Citty of Newe Sarum.

The humble petic'on of John Evered of the Citty aforsaide Pynmaker.

Humblie beseecheth that yo'r Wor'ps woulde be pleased to graunte yo'r peti'coner an estate of a Tenem't in Browne Streate w'ch is nowe voide, and the rather for that yo'r petic'oner wilbe ready to putt in sufficiencte securyty for the repaireing thereof being nowe very ruynous, and y'or poore petic'oner will pray for yo'r Wor'ps in all happieste longe to contynue."

Below in another handwriting:—"In considerac'on hereof whether the petic'oner or Mr. Alford shall have yt is referred to Mr. Mayor with Mr. Biley* and the Chamberlayne."

The City received its Charter of Incorporation from James I. on March 2nd, 1612, and four days later the new constitutions of the "Company of Smythes" were ratified by the seal of the Mayor, this being the first Company reconstituted under the new Charter.

It now included twelve trades, viz., "Smithes, Armorers, Cutlers, Pewterers, Brayzers, Bellfounders, Iremongers, Watchmakers, Wyredrawers, Sadlers, Cardmakers, and Pinnemakers."

Article 1. Previous orders confirmed.

2. Item, It is further ordered that the said company for the better putting in execution of their orders and for the better orderinge and governinge of themselves their servants and apprentices shall hereafter have two Wardens, one Chamberlayne, two Stewardes, one Clarke, two Searchers and Viewers of pewterers' wares, two Searchers and Viewers of sadlers' wares, and one Yeoman of their Companye, and for the present Henry Sambrooke and Thomas Coleman are chosen Wardens, Morgan Morse, pewterer, is chosen Chamberlaine, John Marshman and William Richardson are chosen Stewards, William Richards the elder is chosen Clark, Thomas Tynham and Henry Pistle are appointed viewers and searchers of Pewterers' wares, Thomas Tynham, and William Richardson are appointed viewers and searchers of Sadlers' wares, and Bennett Cowslade is chosen Yeoman &c. &c.

3. To hold assemblies at their Hall.
4. Election of officers, yearly (Thursday next after the feast of Easter).

* Alderman John "Beiyley," Mayor in 1577, died in 1600 (vide Salisbury Corporation Pictures and Plate, pp. 213, 214.)
5. To fyne such as refuse to take office, "ffynes ffourtey shillings for Wardens, twentye shillings for Stewards and Chamberlayne, tenne shillings for Searchers and Viewers."

6. Officers to Accompte (each to give a bond or forfeit 20/-).

7. To come to Assemblies, and attend the Wardens for the tyme beinge at assemblies, at the feast, and to the funeralls of any brother or sister, or upon any other fitt occasion w'ch shallbee thought conveniente by the said Wardens, upon paine that every one that shall make defaulthe haveinge noe reasonable excuse to bee, shall forfeite and loose for every offence twelve pence.

8. Penalty on such as abuse the Wardens (first offence 3s. 4d., second do. 6s. 8d.).

9. Widdowes to use their husbands' trades (only whilst they remain widows, fine 20/-).

10. To enroll apprentices (10/- fee for enrollment).

11. Apprentices not to be taken but by indenture "seven years at the least," forfeit 20/-.

There is a quaint old shield, which at one time hung in the hall* of the Smiths' Guild, and which is now in the possession of a descendant of the last of the Wardens of this Company. This shield has inscribed upon it the words of a song in praise of the Smith. There are seventeen verses of the song, the first of which is as follows:—

Of all ye sweet science under ye sun
Or hathe been since ye worlde begun
"The Smith," by name, greate prais hath won
Which nobody can deny boys, nor nobody shall deny.

In the lower portion of the shield are the words:—

"Now there was no Smith found throughout all the land of Israel, for the Philistines said, lest the Hebrews make them swords or spears. But all ye Israelites went down to ye Philistines to sharpen every man his share and his coulter, and his axe and his mattock. Yet they had a file for the mattockes and for the coulters, and for the forks, and for the axes, and to sharpen the Goads."—I. Sam. xiii. 19, 20, 21.

* This Hall is supposed to have stood behind the site of the present County Hotel, the approach being through the passage leading from High Street to the river, which is referred to more fully on page 281.
CHAPTER XIX.

THE GLOVERS.

Early in the XV. century (1420—30) glovers were included in the same Guild as dubbers and parchment-makers, and the fraternity is mentioned in the Corporation Ledger as the "Dubbers Guild," the names of the wardens being John Crykemore and John Slegge. The "Dubbers" are also included in the list of Guilds which were represented at a meeting held in the Council House in 1440 to raise funds to strengthen the defences of the City, when the Guild still comprised the craftsmen of these three trades. This constitution appears to have continued in force until the reign of Queen Elizabeth, when the ancient Guilds were formed into craft companies, after which the dubbers, or bookbinders, were severed from the glovers, and formed part of another Company. From this time the Glovers' Company, which included glovers, parchment-makers and collar-makers, held their assemblies and feasts at the Tailors' Hall in Milford Street, and the regulations under which they were governed continued in force until 1612, in which year the orders of all the Salisbury companies were cancelled. A copy of the new constitutions granted to the glovers in the following year and ratified by the seal of the Mayor on March 26th, 1613, is in the Salisbury Corporation Muniment Room. Some of the most interesting of these orders are given in full, others of a more general character are abbreviated:—

CHAPTER XX.

THE CLOTHWORKERS.

Originally clothworkers and all others in the City employed in work connected with the making of cloth were included in the Salisbury Weavers' Guild. But at the beginning of the XV. century, when England, which had previously been a country of farmers who exported wool, had become a country of manufacturers who exported cloth, the growth in the commercial life of the people was reflected in Salisbury by the formation of two additional Guilds for those connected with clothmaking, viz., the "Fullers" or "Tuckers," which sometimes appears as "Fullorum, Wardens, Radulph Pakke and Stephen Hywode," and occasionally as "The Towkers," the other Guild being the Dyers, which is referred to in 1420 as "The Diers Guylde, wardenys, John Eston and John Lavyngton."

The Corporation records show that in 1412 the "ffullers gild" advanced forty shillings to the Salisbury Corporation to assist them in proceedings taken against the Southampton Corporation in connection with the customs imposed at that port.

From the same source we learn that, at a meeting held at the Council House in 1420, the Fullers were represented by two stewards of the masters, sixty-one master-fullers, thirty-one journeymen-fullers, and two stewards of the latter.
After the incorporation of the City in 1612 the Weavers, under their Royal Charters, retained their independent organisation, but the Mayor and Corporation, who had just received additional authority under the Charter of James I., constituted the Clothworkers and Dyers a separate Company. The orders and constitutions of this Company received the sanction of the Corporation, and were ratified by the seal of the Mayor in 1613. The records of the Tailors show that the Clothworkers were then granted the use of Tailors' Hall at the nominal rent of 10s. per year:—"The Taylors' Hall is lett to Mr. Michael Mackerell, and James Haylocke, wardens of the Societye of Clothworkers within the saide citty, to have the use of the lower Hall for keeping their Assemblies, and of the Upper Hall and all the rest of the Taylors' Hall, to keepe their Feast, and they are to have the use of the same for seven years from Xmas last at tenn shillings per anno, and the saide Mr. Mackerell and Haylocke are to repair whatsoever is spoiled by them, or that this Company of Taylors demands." In 1657 this rent of 10s. was increased to 20s. per annum.

No information is available as to the strength of the new Company of Clothworkers, but there is evidence that the trade with which they were connected was still the most flourishing industry in Salisbury, and that the large number of small master-weavers, fullers, shearmen and dyers employed in the City were dependent for employment on the wealthy cloth merchants who controlled the clothworkers. These Salisbury merchants not only supplied the home markets, but exported a considerable quantity of fine white cloth. This fabric was dispatched to Holland to be dyed scarlet, and when finished some of it was imported by the same merchants.

A wholesale cloth market or fair was held in Salisbury annually on Twelfth day. This was changed in 1769 to August 24th, and the Twelfth day market was confined to cattle and cheese.

In addition to white and striped flannel, blankets, and a heavy make of serge for which Salisbury was noted, the City appears to have produced a very superior kind of cloth.

The Wiltshire antiquary, Aubrey, in his time (1669), says "The best white cloathes in England are made at Salisbury, where the water, running through chalk, becomes very nitrous, and, therefore, abstersive. These fine cloathes are died black at London, and in Holland scarlet."

Several of the more important of the Salisbury cloth manufacturers had their warehouses in London, and large quantities of cloth, more especially of the better class of material, were dispatched by wagon from Salisbury to the Metropolis and to the neighbouring port of Southampton.

It may be of interest to notice that after the cloth had been woven by the weaver it was taken to the fuller, where it underwent the process of fulling, that is to say, "it was beaten by hammers or stocks, so as to condense the fabric, and to felt together the fibres of the wool. The mill of the fuller was driven by water wheels, the stocks being lifted by tappets on an axle revolved by the wheel and allowed to fall by their own weight, like the stamps now used for crushing ore."
A poem, The Fleece, by John Dyer, published in 1757, gives an interesting explanation of the various processes involved in the conversion of the raw wool into the finished cloth. The first and second books of the poem are devoted to the sheep, the shearer, the sorter, &c., and in the third book the process of manufacture is described, first the spinning, then the weaving, the fulling, &c.

Near some clear sliding river,
Is by the noisy fulling mill received,
Where tumbling waters turn enormous wheels,
Where hammers, rising and descending learn
To imitate the industry of Men."

Finally the web is washed, hung up to dry
"on rugged tenters, to the fervid sun," until at last "The Clothiers shears and burlers' thistle skims the surface skeen."

The orders and regulations granted to the clothworkers in 1613 continued in force until 1674, when, by an order of the Corporation, they were rescinded, and new constitutions were sealed and issued to the Company on February 18th, 1675. These orders, a copy of which is in the Muniment Room, confirmed the appointment of John George and William Antram as wardens, John James the younger as chamberlain, Ambrose Chappell and Nicholas Kimber as stewards, John Powell as clerk, and Samuel Elver as yeoman. Each of these officials was to hold office until the Monday next before the feast of St. Matthew the Apostle.

The orders are divided into 23 sections under the following headings:—
1. Confirmation of present officers.
2. To hold Assemblies.
3. Election of officers.
4. To choose officers in place of such as die.
5. To fine such as refuse to take office.
6. Officers to accompte.
7. To come to Assemblies.
8. None to abuse the Wardens.
9. Widows to use their husband’s trade.
10. To enroll Apprentices.
11. Apprentices to be taken.
12. Clerk to make all indentures.
13. None to keep persons at worke above 16 yeares old unless they be apprenticed, fine 10s.
14. To make apprentices ffreemen.
15. Apprentices to serve out their time if the master die.
16. Apprentices misbehaving themselves to be punished.
17. Noe journeymen to be putt on worke before he hathe provided his certificate.
18. None to use the trades of this Companye (Clothworker or Dyer) before they be free (or keep shoppe), fine 11s.
19. To keepe the Sunday. Item, it is furthur ordered that noe ffree brother or ffree sister of this Companye shall at any time hereafter either by themselves, their servants or others Racke or sett or cause to be racked or sett any Cloth upon any racke or Tenter upon the Lords Day comonly called Sunday uppon paine to forfeite and loose 11s. for every offence.
20. Payment of Quarteridge money.
22. ffor disposing of the monies.
23. The ffeast day.

In 1784 the connection between the clothworkers and the Tailors’ Hall, which had been in existence since 1613, came to an end, and an agreement was made with the Shoemakers’ Company whereby the clothworkers were granted the use of the Shoemakers’ Hall, commonly known as Crew’s Hall, in Hog Lane, for the purpose of holding their assemblies and feasts. Several convictions are recorded for wilfully damaging the racks or tenters of clothworkers, which appears to have been a common offence in the City at this time. The following notice appeared in the Salisbury and Winchester Journal:—“Whereas the Racks of A. Courtney & Co. on Milford Hill, against Laverstock Road, were wantonly cut, on Monday night last and also one night in the Christmas week, whosoever will discover the offender, shall receive ten pounds reward, to be paid on conviction.” It was in this year also that the hat tax came into force, an Act which compelled the retailer in hats to take out a 5s. licence. He was then supplied with tickets, which represented the duty which the customer had to pay, namely, a 3d. stamp on a hat under 4s. in value retail, a 6d. stamp under 7s., a 1s. stamp under 12s., and a 2s. stamp over 12s. The stamp had to be fixed on the lining inside the hat, and the penalty for infringement on the part of the wearer of the hat was £10, the conviction before the justices was for wearing a hat without a stamp in it, and the full penalty was inflicted. In this year also John Chalke, of Winterbourne, was convicted before the County Bench, assembled at the Parade Coffee House (now Read and Orchard, chemist), and fined £20 for selling gloves without a licence.

The City records contain many entries referring to tenements, which included fullers’ racks. These properties, in Castle Street, Endless Street, Rollestone Street and Milford, were probably either upon the bank of the mill stream or upon some of the smaller streams which ran through the City at that time. The spinning jenny was introduced into Salisbury by Mr. Wansey in 1791, and the Corporation ordered "that all fullers and dyers are to keep to their own crafts, and not meddle or interfere with the business of the clothiers."

The anecdote concerning Mr. H. P. Wyndham, M.P.,* and King George III., which is mentioned in An Historical and Descriptive Account of New Sarum (Whittaker, London, 1834), shows that in 1795 there was a very great demand for the best striped cloth, which was then being made in Salisbury. Mr. Wyndham was a favourite of George III., and it is said he appeared at Court in a coat made of dark striped cloth. The King, mistaking it for a French cloth, exclaimed, "What! What! Wyndham in a French coat?"

"No, please your Majesty, it is not French," replied Wyndham. "What, then?" quoth his Majesty. "It is a cloth made at Salisbury," said Wyndham. "Then send me some of it," was the King's reply. This was done, and the article became so fashionable that orders poured in to the Salisbury manufacturers till every place in the City which could be rented to hold a loom was furnished with one of the machines.

Hatcher mentions a fine silk and wool fancy striped cloth, which was used for coats and waistcoats, and states that one of the clothiers, Mr. Hutchings, paid £2000 per year for silk to use in making up these popular cloths. The Mr. Hutchings referred to by Hatcher was probably William Hutchings, or Hutchence, who was Churchwarden of St. Martin's in 1778, or his son, Robert Hutchence, who filled the same office in 1795. They were both cloth manufactrers, and their factory was situated in St. Martin's Church.

* Henry Penruddock Wyndham was Mayor of Salisbury in 1771, and one of the Members of Parliament for the County of Wilts from 1795 to 1811.
Street, next to the Church. On May 10th, 1799, the St. Martin's Vestry agreed "that Mr. Hutchence may build a wall at his own expense at the west end of the Churchyard upon a straight line with his own wall."

This period of prosperity, caused by the demands of fashion, was succeeded by a time of bad trade for the local clothworkers, and during the years 1810—11 there appears to have been a certain amount of distress in the City. The industry gradually declined in Salisbury, and one after another the local cloth factories were closed, that of Mr. Hutchence being converted into, and still forms a part of, the present St. Martin's Schools. The parish records show that in 1812 a lease of this property was granted to "the trustees of the Tontine of the National School,"* of which Mr. Daniel Eyre was chairman.

In 1810 the Shoemakers' Company granted a lease of their hall to James Trowbridge, reserving to their own Company and to the Company of Clothworkers the use of the hall "at all times when required to hold their assemblies and feasts."

Little is known of the clothworkers after this time. Their last public appearance as a trade company was in 1814, when they took part in the procession which formed part of the local festivities held in Salisbury in connection with the celebration of peace.

* The National Society for the Education of the Poor in the Principles of the Established Church was founded by Churchmen in October, 1811.
CHAPTER XXI.

ADMISSION OF FREEMEN AND GRANTING OF LOANS.

Under the Charters which the City received from James I., Charles I., Oliver Cromwell, Charles II. and Queen Anne, the Mayor and Corporation were authorised to make free citizens. The Charter of Oliver Cromwell provided "that no person other than such free citizens shall hereafter use any arte, trade, mistery, or manuall occupation withinoure saide cittee and the liberties and precincts thereof, saveing in the tyme of the faiors then to be kept, and dureing the continuance of such faiors only."

These Charters empowered the Mayor to close the shop of any offender, and to impose a fine not exceeding ten shillings for every time such person "opened his windows to use or exercise any trade, arte, mistery or manuall occupation, or expose to salle or cause to be exposed to salle any ware or marchandize," and by warrant to sell the goods and chattels of the delinquent, "rendringe unto such offender the overplus."

An artisan or tradesman who wished to work or trade in the City had first to satisfy the officers of one of the Companies as to his good character and his proficiency as a workman. Upon his doing so, he obtained a certificate from the Trade Company, which he presented, with his application to be made a freeman, to the Corporation. If the Corporation were satisfied with the stranger's credentials, he was, after paying a fee of 10s. to the Corporation and one of 3s. 4d. to the Company which had accepted him as a member, admitted as a freeman, and had full liberty to work and trade within the City. The oath taken by the freeman, as entered in the Ledger, is as follows:

"I doe willingly sweare that I will from henceforth to the uttermost of my power mayntayne and defend the libertey and priviledges of this citty men'ioned and granted in the several charters of our late Soveraigne Lords King James and King Charles the first and King Charles the second, and all the lib'ties of this citty granted to the citty by the said Kings and other their noble progenitors; And will from time to time obey and performe all orders and constituc'ons made or to be made for the good government and profitt thereof, or for the preservac'on of any, the liberties, lands or goods belonginge to the same, or the incorporac'on thereof, soe neere as God shall give me grace. Soe helpe me God."

The following extracts relating to the admission of freemen appear in the Ledgers:

"March 10, 1628. Application received from Richard Snow, watch maker, dial maker and clock maker, who desires to have the freedom of the City, which is now granted to him and he is forthwith to be bound to use no other trade, and he is to attend the Company of Smiths to be ordered by them as is fit, and to be of that Company; he gave 10s."

"June 7, 1628. Ordered that the Company of Smiths, cutlers &c. may sue, prosecute, arrayn or implead Thomas Roude, under their orders & constitutions, for keeping shop, and using the trade and mystery of selling hardware or cutlers' ware, within this City, he not being allowed a free citizen."

On August 22nd, 1636, the Corporation passed a resolution:—
"That no one shall let a house or shop to any stranger not being a freeman of the City, to carry on any trade, on pain of £10 forfeit for every offence. Also, that no freeman or shopkeeper shall put out work out of the City, if it can be done in the City, under a penalty of 13s. 4d."
Complaints were made by the Companies that strangers were trading in the City who were neither freemen nor members of a Company, and a few weeks later the following order was made by the Corporation:—"July 7, 1639, Att this Councell yt is ordered that all tradesmen within this Citty, or any other inhabitant there using any art or mystery or occupation, shall upon notice given to them, cast themselves into the Companies according to former orders made to that purpose, or else the penalty of the same orders will be sued for." Possibly the excuse was made by some of the strangers that they did not join the Companies owing to the cost of the feast which new members were expected to provide, as a few weeks after another order was issued by the Council as follows:—"That no tradesman of this Citty is to be enforced, at his admission into any of the Companies, to give or make any breakfast or feast for the said Company, and the Wardens of the Company of Taylors are desired to take notice of this accordingly."

Walter Swanson, who had been a generous benefactor to his native City during his lifetime, died on November 10th, 1661, and bequeathed £300 to certain of the Salisbury Trade Companies, namely, £50 each to the Joyners, the Glovers, the Shoemakers, the Clothworkers, the Butchers, and the Smiths, "to be employed in the same manner as was the legacy of Mr. Windover."* His previous benefactions included a sum of £300, which he gave to the Corporation to be lent in sums of £10 each to 30 poor tradesmen for three years without interest, and also a bequest to provide for an annual sermon and distribution of bread to the poor at St. Thomas' Church.

The whole of the Salisbury Companies were reconstituted in 1675, the resolution passed at the meeting of the Corporation on July 30th of this year being as follows:—"Ordered, that the constitutions of the several Companies are to be from henceforth vacated and made void, and the Committee of Revenue are to send for the several Wardens, and treat and agree with them for new constitutions." The new orders, copies of which are in the Muniment Room, were ratified with the seal of the Mayor during 1675 and 1676, and in the latter year a letter of attorney was granted to the various Companies giving them authority to sue for breaches of their rules. An order was also made that all tradesmen were "to cast themselves into Companies," and that no one should have any gift or loan, unless they had been sworn free citizens.

From this time the Corporation Ledgers contain much longer reports of the Council meetings, and include the names of all who were made free citizens. At some of the monthly meetings as many as 30 persons were admitted. Some of them were distinguished strangers, but the great majority were either artizans and newcomers to the City, or young men who had completed their apprenticeship in Salisbury. A large number of the last mentioned were granted loans of money, without interest, to enable them to make a start in their trade. These loans were provided by the Corporation from money left them by past benefactors, including Sir Thomas White, Lord Mayor of London in 1553, John
Duke of Somerset, Mr. Grobham, Mr. Taylor, and others. The applicants for these charities were obliged to find two bondsmen of approved position as securities before the loans were granted. It may be of interest to give a few extracts from the Ledger at this date, to show the system adopted and also some of the names and trades of those concerned:

During the next fifty years the number of members of the Salisbury Trade Companies rapidly declined, "with the exception of the Weavers' and the Clothworkers' Companies, which included the trades most prevalent in the City at that time. Certainly the majority of those who were admitted as free citizens belonged to one of these trades. The following are a few of the names of those made freemen during this fifty years, some of whom, in later years, became leading citizens and wealthy men:
ADMISSION OF FREEMEN AND GRANTING OF LOANS.

Clothiers.

William Batt, James Street, Mathew Pitte, Thomas Abbott, Peter Tynham, Thomas Powell, Edward Dashwood, Samuel Awbrey, Robert Antrum, Thomas Batchellor, Thomas Sturridge, John Bristow, Robert Sutton, Thomas ffreeman, Joshua Bytham, Mathew Harper, Richard Marsh, John Thrender, Timothy Spratt, John Winkworth, Thomas Stockwell and Edward Hinxman. The last-named Edward Hinxman became a wealthy master clothier or cloth maker; he served the office of Mayor in 1784, and in 1794 purchased from the Executors of Colonel Edward Young, deceased, the estate at Little Durnford, now owned by Mr. M. H. W. Devenish.
CHAPTER XXII.

THE WOOLCOMBERS.

Upon the occasion of the celebration of the national thanksgiving for peace after the American War of Independence, held in Salisbury in 1784, there were only five of the ancient Trade Companies left to take part in the procession. These were the Tailors, the Weavers, the Shoemakers, the Clothworkers, and the Joiners; but a new Company, the Woolcombers, made its first appearance as a society upon that occasion. The report of this celebration gives also the earliest record we have in Salisbury of the Modern Clubs or Friendly Societies, several of which were formed in the City during the latter part of the XVIII. century. These Social Clubs may be said to have formed the link between the ancient Guilds and Companies and the great Friendly Societies of the present day. They appear to have given assistance to the members and their families in case of sickness or death in much the same way as the old Guilds and Trade Companies had done in the past. As far as can be ascertained, these new Societies were the Rainbow Club, whose headquarters were at the Rainbow Inn (the present William the Fourth) in Milford Street. the Goat Club (Goat Inn), the Dolphin Club (Dolphin Inn), the White Horse Club (White Horse Inn), and the Vine Club, whose clubroom was at the Vine Tavern, now Messrs. Curtis and Sons' premises in St. Thomas' Square.
An excellent description of the Companies in the procession upon the occasion of the peace celebrations referred to appeared in the Salisbury and Winchester Journal for August 2nd, 1784, from which we quote the following extract:—

"Thursday being appointed by Royal Proclamation a day of thanksgiving for the return of the blessings of peace to these Kingdoms, it was observed in Salisbury with a festivity unusually splendid and general. The morning was ushered in by ringing of bells, discharge of artillery, &c., and at half-past ten o'clock the Worshipful the Mayor, the Earl of Radnor (Recorder), Edward Poore, Esq., jun. (Deputy-Recorder), Aldermen and Corporation, preceded by the Sergeants-at-Mace, Constables, &c., and attended by Saint Christopher, the ancient Giant, the Companies of Woolcombers, Joiners, Shoemakers, Weavers, and Taylors, and also by five Friendly Societies, with bands of music, a display of the banners belonging to the various bodies, &c., went in procession to the Cathedral Church, where divine service was performed and a sermon preached upon the occasion. On the return, the Mayor, Recorder and Corporation partook of an elegant entertainment in the Council Chamber, to which a fat buck was presented by William Hussey, Esq.* The several Companies retired also to their halls, &c., where entertainments were provided for themselves and their friends. In the evening there was a large bonfire in the Market Place, a display of fireworks and a general illumination in the city and the Close. . . . Perhaps a more beautiful pageant was never seen in the West of England. The Giant, concerning whose origin even tradition is faint, was entirely new dressed upon the occasion (his coat alone taking 34 yards of cloth). His attendants and Hobnob and his esquire were also adorned in character. There was a very numerous and respectable appearance of the Corporation, and the companies and societies vied in splendour, order and good conduct. This was the first appearance of the Woolcombers as a society, and they added in no small degree to the beauty of the scene; they were preceded by a boy and a girl, who were elegantly habited in the dresses of a shepherd and a shepherdess, and followed by a band of youths uniformly dressed in white, with sashes of various coloured wool and carrying wands, next came Bishop Blaze in his episcopal robes and mitre, holding a Prayer Book and a woolcomb in his hands, mounted on a white horse and attended by pages, and followed by his Chaplain, also mounted on a white horse. The body of Combers, dressed in white uniform, with sashes of wool and a banner of the same, closed a scene which gave infinite satisfaction to all, and reflected honour on the members. The character of the pious inventor of wool-combing was supported with no less dignity than humility. However the cynical and austere may affect to despise these scenes of harmless mirth, the more liberal and good humoured must rejoice in them, for so long as they are unattended with riot and mischief, they unbend the brow of care, exhilarate the heart, and teach the value of a social hour.”

The Company of Woolcombers, whose hall was in St. Edmund’s Church Street, appear to have had a fairly prosperous career for about 50 years, and judging from the following notice in the Salisbury and Winchester Journal of 1786, they were sufficiently numerous to demonstrate in procession alone:—“The Woolcombers of this City, with the representation of their titular Bishop Blaze and his Chaplain, and the whole of the Society characteristically habited, intend to walk in procession on Friday next according to annual custom.”

St. Blaize, Bishop of Sebaste, who is sometimes described as the “reputed inventor of the art of wool-combing,” is said to have had the honour of becoming the patron saint of woolcombers in consequence of his having been put to death after being cruelly whipped with scourges and his flesh lacerated with “Combes of Yren” (iron combes). The following description of a solemn pageant of the woolcombers at one of the festivals that were held in commemoration of Bishop Blaize in the north of England during the early part of the XIX. century is taken from Clavis Calendaria, by John Brady (London, 1814):—

“The procession was led by Jason, as the champion and protector of the golden fleece, who was followed by shepherds and shepherdesses; a beautiful girl elegantly dressed, carried a lamb upon her lap, with a bouquet of flowers made of wool in her bosom; next followed the venerable Bishop, his mitre with the keys of St. Peter gilt in front were formed of wool; and he had a large wig of the same material, which reached down to the saddle; his bridle was held on each side by a page, and another was at the stirrups carrying a Bible in one hand and a wool-comb in the other; his followers dressed in white, with sashes, scarfs, and high caps, carrying two large flags, all made of wool, and wands; two persons elevated on a stage were at work showing the manner in which wool is combed."

It may also be of interest to refer to the composition of the procession which formed part of the local festivities which were held in Salisbury in connection with the Celebration of Peace in 1814. After the Mayor and Corporation, who with the Recorder and chief officials led the procession, came the Freemasons, who were followed by the two Corporate bodies, the Tailors and the Weavers, after which came the four surviving Craft Companies which received their constitutions from the Mayor and Corporation, namely, the Woolcombers, the Tuckers, the Joiners, and the Shoemakers. The procession also included six (or seven) Friendly Societies. These were probably the five Clubs which took part in the 1784 celebrations, with the addition of the New Inn Club and the Malmesbury Arms Club. In connection with these festivities in 1814 six thousand four hundred persons were entertained in the City, and the subscriptions collected for the purpose amounted to one thousand pounds, in addition to which Lord Radnor, who was Recorder of the City, provided wine for those who took part in the procession. The following copy of a receipted invoice for wine supplied by Messrs. Lake and Maton, which is amongst the papers in the Muniment Room, appears to show that the Recorder at this time

At the festival to celebrate the passing of the Reform Bill, held on June 26th, 1832, out of the three Trade Companies left in the City, only one took part in the procession upon that occasion, namely, the Woolcombers. The Tailors' Corporation declined, as their funds were low, but they lent the whole of their quaint paraphernalia, to be carried in the procession, which was largely composed of the members of the Social Clubs and Societies, whose names were given in connection with the 1784 and 1814 festivities, and also a new Lodge (No. 102) of the Ancient Order of Druids, which was established in 1824. The Crown Hotel, in High Street, was the headquarters of the Salisbury Lodge of Druids, and this, the first occasion of their taking part in a procession, is commemorated by a print after a drawing by Mr. Wainwright, at that time master of the Salisbury National School. Copies of this print are to be seen in the Museum and at the Municipal Offices.

* Messrs. Richardson Bros., Wine Merchants, succeeded to the business of Lake and Maton.
The decay of the old industrial system, controlled and regulated by the Companies, was now complete, and the privileges of the Companies were formally abolished in 1835. It is, however, of interest to notice the composition of the procession in Salisbury upon the next occasion of national rejoicing. In January, 1842, festivities were held to celebrate the christening of the infant Prince who afterwards became King Edward VII. On that occasion the two surviving members of the Joiners' Company took part in the procession, one, the Chamberlain, an aged man, who carried the ancient banner of the fraternity, and the other, the Yeoman or Beadle, who wore the ornate livery of the Company. This livery is said to have been 212 years old at the time.

The Corporation of Tailors, now reduced to five members, maintained their old traditions upon this occasion, and brought out the whole of their quaint paraphernalia, including the Giant and his two attendants (one of whom carried the mace and the other the sword); also Hobnob, accompanied by the Morris Dancers, the ancient banner of the Guild, and the beadle in his gold-braided livery, with cocked hat, silk stockings, and buckled shoes, &c. The new Clubs, or Friendly Societies, had now increased in number, eleven of them taking part in this procession, namely, the Ancient Order of Druids, the Dolphin Club, the Scots Lane Benefit Society, the Methodist Society, the Goat Club, the Malmesbury Arms Club, the Vine Club, the White Horse Club, the New Inn Club, Endless Street Union Society, and the Salisbury Refuge Tent of the Independent Order of Rechabites, with the Juvenile Tent under their superintendence. In 1856 the Tailors'
Company, four in number, appeared in a procession, with their full paraphernalia, according to their custom, and in 1880 this, the last of the ancient Guilds of Salisbury, incorporated by Royal Charter in 1445, became defunct.

The abandonment of the old industrial system and its ancient traditions was the effect of causes that had been working during the whole of the preceding century, or even a longer period. The rapid expansion of the trade of the country, the increase of mechanical appliances, the development of our coalfields, and the introduction of the factory system were among the causes that brought about the collapse of local industries in many of the towns in the south of England, including those of Salisbury, which had been noted for its cloth for something like 250 years, and for a shorter period for the excellence of the cutlery which it produced.* At the same time a great extension of the manufacture of cloth took place in Yorkshire and Lancashire, which had been among the poorest of the English counties in Mediæval days.

The regulation of wages and apprenticeships by Act of Parliament ceased, and whilst the Clubs and Benefit Societies took the place of the Guilds and Companies in one phase of their work, the Factory Acts and the Trade Unions superseded them in efforts to protect the workmen and to better their wages. These labour organisations may be said to be a revival of one of the most useful features of the ancient Guilds. The loss of the old system of compulsory apprenticeship, a system which undoubtedly secured a good supply of efficient workmen, well instructed in their craft, is becoming generally recognised as being mainly responsible for the increasing amount of unskilled labour and the large number of men who are permanently doomed to low wages. The most pleasing features of the Companies of London at the present day are the great works of public utility which they undertake, more especially those connected with education, e.g., the Mercers' School, Merchant Taylors' School, St. Paul's School, Aldenham School, Great Crosby School, Oundle School and many others.

Scholarships and exhibitions are maintained by the London Companies, and new ones are founded at Oxford, Cambridge and elsewhere. We may mention likewise the City and Guilds of London Institute for the Advancement of Technical Education, the Trades Training School in Great Titchfield Street, the Leather Trades Technical School at Bethnal Green, &c. With some knowledge of the beneficent work done by the London Companies in this direction, and of the very considerable funds which they now devote to the encouragement of apprenticeships, one cannot help a feeling of regret that the Salisbury Companies did so little to preserve their Corporate possessions.

What an advantage it would be to the City if only a portion of the income from the property of these old Companies was available at the present day to supplement the amount spent upon Technical Education and apprenticeships by the local authorities and by the Trustees of the Municipal Charities.
